SIR,—In your admirable article in the September number on the season's music on the Lancashire coast, your correspondent, while referring among other seaside towns to Lytham, did not mention the very excellent band which had been performing there for some seven weeks. This band was under the competent conductorship of Mr. Bell, and the selections given (over 130 items a week) were sufficiently varied to suit the musical tastes of all. Among the composers drawn upon may be mentioned Handel, Haydn, Mozart, Wagner, Donizetti, Auber, Balfe, Bishop, Mendelssohn, Gounod, Nicolai, and Sullivan. The solo playing of Miss Annie Kirkman (a violinist of exceptional ability, who led the first violins), was greatly enjoyed. Her playing of Vieuxtemps's 'Fantasia caprice' was marked by brilliancy of execution and rare insight, the band supporting her with excellent restraint. The performances were greatly enjoyed, both by residents and visitors, and it is hoped that the Lytham Council will again engage Mr. Bell (the conductor) for next season.

Yours faithfully,

Wallingford, Lytham.

SCIENCE AND SINGING.

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

DEAR SIR,—Whilst offering you my best thanks for the large amount of valuable space which you devoted to your last issue to a criticism of 'Science and Singing,' I trust that in justice to the work you will very kindly permit me space for a few remarks upon the matter.

The writer of the article says: 'he contradicts his statement in p. 9, in which he says "I now know and teach that the vocal cords are not sound-producers at all," whilst on p. 54, referring to the same matter, he says, "I would not like to make such a positive statement . . . it may be possible for the vocal cords to produce sound." The quotation with respect to p. 9 is correct, but on p. 54 I am not referring to the same matter. On p. 9 I am writing of what I teach; it is therefore quite clear that vocal tone is under consideration. On p. 54 the question is asked, 'Do you then maintain that the vocal cords cannot produce tone of any sort?' The reply is: 'I would not like to make such a positive statement.' The word any is in the volume itself printed in italics, so that the thinking person should see that vocal tone is not referred to, but merely a noise, or a sound of some kind. I then point out that a considerable sound can be made by blowing upon a blade of grass placed between the thumbs, but no one would look upon a blade of grass as a musical instrument. So, although a noise or sound of some sort can probably be forced from the vocal cords, this does not in the least prove that they are responsible for vocal tone. I think that when the whole of these two statements is considered, and not merely scraps of them, it will be quite evident that I am not guilty of any contradiction in this respect.

I could point out other errors in the article, but I fear to trespass on your space. Your reviewer is quite positive that the accepted theory of tone being produced by the approximation of the vocal cords and their varying tension is correct. I am equally positive that it is incorrect. It is of course exceedingly difficult to make experiments on human beings, but it is comparatively easy to do so with birds. I suggest therefore that each of us shall take a cockerel. My fault-finding friend shall have his bird killed, and then, taking out the wind-pipe and larynx, endeavour to produce tone therefrom. Should he succeed—and he seems to pin his faith to such experiments—I will admit that I have not taken sufficient 'trouble to stop and consider.' Should he fail, my bird shall be killed, and then with the vocal cords wide apart, and in a state of absolute collapse, I will endeavour to produce a crow from the dead fowl. Should I succeed, I think it will be evident that there is considerably more science in my work than my friendly opponent has been able to detect, and that his mental vision should have had a little more adjustment before he took up his pen to write his criticism upon 'Science and Singing.'

Yours very truly,

Broadwood's Studios,

Obituary.

We regret to record the following deaths:

The Rev. FREDERICK ALFRED JOHN HERVEY, on August 8, aged sixty-four years. The late Rev. Canon Hervey, C.V.O., Canon of Norwich and formerly Rector of Sandringham, Domestic Chaplain to His present Majesty and to His late Majesty King Edward VII., was an amateur musician in its fullest and truest sense. He had been devoted to music all his life. When a boy at Marlborough College he sang in the choir, and assisted occasionally at the organ. On going to Cambridge he threw himself heart and soul into the study of music, and studied theory under the inspiring influence of Dr. Garrett. He seldom missed the meetings of the Fitzwilliam Musical Society, which in 'the seventies' was the principal Society of its kind in the University of Cambridge, whilst in vacation he studied under Dr. E. J. Hopkins at the Temple Church. At Sandringham, where he was rector for nearly thirty years, he did much to improve the choir, and never if he could help it missed a practice. When he became Canon of Norwich, he was well prepared to appreciate the services of the Cathedral. His music was essentially of a conservative type, and he enjoyed to the full the ancient and stately strains he lived to hear. The Cathedral service was a joy to him to the end of his life, and it never lessened. No wonder, then, that the fullest sympathy existed between the late Canon and the talented organist and choir of Norwich Cathedral. The interests of the choir were always uppermost with him, and he made his interest felt. The late Canon was endowed with a rich flow of melody, which was apparent in his compositions—one hymn he will be especially known by was 'The roseate hues of early dawn,' that his friend Sir Joseph Barnby introduced into 'The hymnary.' His single chants were of a high order—one is generally used at St. Paul's Cathedral in the Burial Service. Canon Hervey will be regretted by a large circle of musical friends. He was a member of the governing body of the Royal College of Music.

On August 26, at Goring, Bucks, through heart failure, Mr. HERBERT L. FULKERSON, an esteemed teacher of singing and a delightful vocalist. An American by birth, a native of Cleveland, Ohio, U.S.A., he had chosen for many years to make his home in England. Coming to this country in 1878, he entered the Royal Academy of Music, studying singing with Signor Flori, and later with Signor Randegger, and finishing with a course of study with Madame Des Granges in Paris. In 1883 he accepted the Precentorship of Regent Square Presbyterian Church, Grays Inn Road (known as the 'Scotch' Church, and from the pulpit of which was delivered Irving's famous 'Gift of tongues' oration). For many years this was one of the few London churches where there was no organ accompaniment. Mr. Fulkerson soon made his impression on the congregational singing. This post he still held at the time of his death. He had also shared in the recent revision of 'Church Praise.' His unswerving uprightness of character and many lovable qualities endeared him to a large circle of friends.

Dr. FRANZ XAVER HABERL, at Regensburg, on September 7. Born on April 12, 1840, at Oberellenbach in Lower Bavaria, Dr. Haberl, who occupied the position of principal of the Kirchenmusikschule in Regensburg, was considered unrivalled as an authority on Roman Catholic church music. He became widely known by his 'Magister choralis,' a theoretical and practical treatise on the Gregorian Chant. In a publication issued during the nineties he proved Marco Antonio Ingegneri (c. 1752) to be the author of the 'Responsoria hebdomadae sanctae,' until then generally considered the work of Palestrina. The deceased, who held the title of 'Geistlicher Rat,' did excellent editorial work in connection with the complete editions of the works of Palestrina and Orlando di Lasso.

Mr. ALLAN MACBETH, of Glasgow. He was the son of Mr. Norman Macbeth, R.A. His musical studies were carried on in Germany, principally at Leipzig, where he was a pupil of Richter, Reinecke, and Jadassohn. As an organist he succeeded to several important posts in Scotland, and on coming to Glasgow became principal of the Athenæum School of Music and the Glasgow College of Music. His compositions include the cantata 'The land of glory' and a number of smaller works.

Mr. INGRAM ADAMS, husband of Madame Amina Goodwin, the well-known pianist of the London Trio. He was the son of Judge Adams, of Pennsylvania, and related to two former American Presidents. Mr. Adams took a keen interest in musical affairs, especially in connection with the musical career of his wife.

Mr. HENRY LAWSON, a well-known and highly respected Liverpool musician, who led the Societa Armonica for over twenty years, and was for many years one of the first violins in the Philharmonic Society's orchestra. He died at the age of eighty-five.

Mr. EDWARD ARTHUR HARVEY, president of the Bristol Madrigal Society. He died at his residence in Victoria Square, Clifton, on September 8, at the age of seventy-one. He filled the office of honorary secretary for thirty years, and in January, 1899, when Sir George W. Edwards resigned the post of president, Mr. Harvey was selected to succeed him.

Mr. ARTHUR COQUARD, a composer little known in this country but much esteemed in France. A pupil of César Franck, he was favoured with a special tribute from his master. His principal compositions were orchestral. Some of his operas have achieved success, and the composer also earned some renown as a critic.

THE GLOUCESTER FESTIVAL.

The 187th meeting of the Three Choirs of Gloucester, Worcester and Hereford Cathedrals, was held at Gloucester on September 4, 6, 7, 8 and 9. It brought forward one of the most varied programmes that have ever been produced at a Three Choirs festival, and its musical and fairly satisfactory financial result will, it may be hoped, dispose of the rumours that the institution is threatened with abandonment or a much restricted scope. Whatever may be said as to the relative importance of these festivals from a national point of view, it cannot be questioned that they minister to the musical education of a large and important local section of the community, and in these times, when the necessity for the decentralization of musical activities is being preached, this must be a gain.

It is impossible in our limited space to do more than briefly comment on the chief features of the festival. The artists engaged were as follows: Madame Agnes Nicholls, Madame de Vere-Sapio, Madame Amy Simpson, Madame Gleeson-White, Madame Ada Crossley, Miss Edith Clegg, Miss Mildred Jones, Miss Phyllis Lett, Mr. John Coates, Mr. Plunket Greene, Mr. Frederic Austin, Mr. William Higley and Mr. Robert Radford. Solo violinists, Herr Fritz Kreisler and Miss Muriel Pickupp. Principal first violin, Mr. W. H. Reed. At the organ, Dr. G. R. Sinclair and Mr. I. A. Atkins. General conductor, Dr. A. Herbert Brewer. Sir Hubert Parry, Sir Edward Elgar and Mr. Granville Bantock conducted their own works.

The proceedings commenced with a Service held in the Cathedral on Sunday afternoon, September 4. The music included a Magnificat in A and Nunc dimittis in D by Mr. Ivor Atkins, and the last movement of Brahms's Symphony in C minor. Mr. A. P. Porter gave a short organ recital consisting of five pieces by S. S. Wesley, and Miss Pickupp (violin) played Handel's Largo in C. Monday was devoted to rehearsals, and on Tuesday, the 6th, 'Elijah' was given in the morning. This oratorio served to show that the choir was a fine one in every respect. In the evening a Fantasia on a theme by Thomas Tallis, written for string orchestra by Dr. Vaughan Williams, was conducted by the composer. It is a grave work, exhibiting power and much charm of the contemplative kind, but it appeared over long for the subject-matter. A fine performance of 'The Dream of Gerontius' followed, under the direction of Sir Edward Elgar. The modified version of Newman's poem, adapting it for use in a Protestant Cathedral, was used. Mr. Coates, Mr. Higley, and Miss Phyllis Lett were able exponents of the solos.

On the morning of the 7th Sir Hubert Parry's impressive motet 'Beyond these voices there is peace,' was given with due regard to its solemnity and pathos, and this was followed by one of the finest performances of Elgar's A flat Symphony it has been our good fortune to hear. The orchestral players, familiar as they now are with every detail, were able, under the inspiring direction of the composer, to reveal many of the delicate beauties of the work that have hitherto not attracted the attention they deserve. The second half of the programme included Dr. Basil Harwood's Organ Concerto in D major, a review of which will be found on page 641. It was well played by the composer. Brahms's Rhapsodie for alto solo and male-voice choir scarcely made its customary effect. This was followed by an unaccompanied motet, 'The Lord's prayer,' written for the festival by Mr. C. Lee Williams, who was formerly a Gloucester Cathedral organist. The setting is an admirable example of a cappella choral writing, and its effect was wholly beautiful as music and satisfying as expression. It is one of the abiding recollections of the festival. The last item was the cantata, 'By the waters of Babylon,' by Goetz. This setting is an early work of a composer who died all too young. Its treatment of the text suggests the power that might have developed into genius.

The evening concert on the 7th was given in the newly enlarged and decorated Shire Hall, which is now a comfortable and spacious arena. This acquisition to the city was made possible in the first instance by the generosity and local patriotism of Sir Hubert Parry, whose charming residence and estate are a few miles out of Gloucester. The addition made consists mainly in the provision of an extensive balcony. During the evening Sir Hubert Parry was the recipient of a grateful address from the Corporation of the city. In the course of an interesting reply, Sir Hubert said that he looked to music as an antidote to socialism, and he expressed the desire to get the people from the slums to be elevated by the power of music. The programme was a miscellaneous one. The chief items were Sir Hubert Parry's dignified 'Ode to Music,' which was written some time ago for a function of the Royal College of Music, and a new Suite for chorus and orchestra, entitled 'Summer Sports,' composed by Dr. Brewer. The new work, in five numbers set to old-English poetry, revealed the fluency and inventiveness of the composer, and much pleased the audience. A good deal of the effect of the suite is to be found in the orchestral accompaniment, but the vocal writing is always interesting and melodious. The last section is the most elaborately worked out, and is a very effective climax to the suite. Three songs from a song-cycle, 'Cushendall,' by Sir Charles Stanford, were finely sung by Mr. Plunket Greene, and Herr Kreisler thoroughly captivated his audience by his violin solos.

On the facing page are given two views of the interior of the Shire Hall.

On the morning of the 8th, Richard Strauss's 'Tod und Verklärung' and Verdi's 'Requiem' were finely performed in the Cathedral. The second part of the programme comprised Beethoven's 'Eroica' Symphony and a motet for double choir, 'The righteous live for evermore,' composed and conducted by Dr. Charles H. Lloyd. This fine specimen of unaccompanied choral-writing was composed for the Gloucester festival of 1901. The music is diatonic and simple, and possible for almost any choir that can be divided into eight parts.

In the Cathedral, on the evening of the 8th, Mr. Bantock's short sacred cantata 'Gethsemane,' an episode from the 'Life of Christ' (a large work more or less completed), was performed. Its production was looked forward to with great interest, for although it was composed ten years or more ago, it was now being performed for the first time. Only by ascribing prophetic vision to Mr. Bantock can the work be truly described—as it was announced—as having been composed for the present festival. The music, while constantly interesting because of its power and originality, is a product of the composer's pre-Omar Khayyam style. As it avoids scholastic forms, it makes its appeal mainly as expressive drama. Judged from this standpoint the purpose and appropriateness of the music are not always clear. But there are some thrilling moments, and the orchestral devices always hold the attention. We look forward to the time when this section of the mysteriously hinted-at large work can be heard in relation to the whole plan. Mr. Frederic Austin interpreted the baritone solos with much impressiveness. Bach's Violin concerto in E major, played by Herr Kreisler, and Mendelssohn's 'Lobgesang,' completed the day's programme. The high pitch adopted in order to fit that of the organ seemed to embarrass the eminent violinist in the first movement of the concerto, but the other movements were splendidly played.

The 'Messiah,' with Mozart's additional accompaniments, was performed on the last day (September 9).

The financial results of the festival were very promptly ascertained and published. The expenses were less by £134 than they were three years ago, but as the sale of tickets declined by as much as £443, a deficit of about £300 will have to be met by depleting the fund derived from the collections, stewards' subscriptions and dividends, which this year amounts to £1,600. The balance of £1,300 will go to local charities.

Mr. Gervase Elwes was one of the tenors announced. It was regretted by all that a temporary indisposition prevented him from singing. Mr. John Coates, who was in exceptionally good voice throughout the festival, added Mr. Elwes's work to his own.

A fuller annotation of the music might with great advantage have been given in the programmes.

The general arrangements, under the charge of Mr. P. Barrett Cooke, were all that could be desired. As is usual at the Three Choirs festival, there were numerous social functions of an agreeable character. It is the turn of Worcester next year.

CARDIFF TRIENNIAL FESTIVAL.

SEPTEMBER 19 TO 24.

Cardiff has again justified its enterprise in organizing a musical festival of the first grade. The event under notice is the sixth of the series, and if its financial result does not turn out to be profitable there can be no question that musically it is exerting a great influence in encouraging native composers and in bringing before its audiences so much great music. The promoters spared no expense and trouble to secure the best available resources. The choir of 280 voices—a volunteer one, it should be noted—gathered from the town and neighbouring districts, seem now capable of tackling the most difficult of modern music. Their enthusiasm and loyalty were exhilarating to witness. The tone is blendful and fairly round. The balance is deficient in tenors, and the basses, with all their unity of quality, are never impressively resonant. But on the whole they are a plastic body, alert and vigorous, and they display excellent musicianship. Once or twice there was an ominous tendency to sing flat—we are afraid we must put the blame, such as it is, on the sopranos—but then the Cardiff chorus is not the only festival chorus that deviates occasionally from just intonation. We believe that Mr. T. E. Aylward, the festival organist, was chiefly responsible for the training of the choir, but the programme did not state the fact.

The band was that of the London Symphony Orchestra, a statement that connotes the highest excellence, and the principals were: sopranos—Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Perceval Allen, Miss Amy Evans, Miss Jennie Ellis; contraltos—Madame Ada Crossley, Miss Dilys Jones, Madame Kirkby Lunn; tenors—Mr. Ben Davies, Mr. Walter Hyde, Mr. W. E. Carston; basses—Mr. Herbert Brown, Mr. Ivor Foster, Mr. David Hughes, Mr. Wilfrid Douthitt. Solo violin, M. Zacharewitsch; solo pianist, Miss Marie Novello. The leader of the orchestra was Mr. T. H. Morrison. The conductor was Dr. Frederic H. Cowen. The outstanding features of the programme were the inclusion of three new choral works—by Sir Alexander Mackenzie, Dr. Cowen and Dr. Thomas—and a new poem for orchestra by Mr. Hamilton Hart.

Eight concerts were given during the six days over which the festival was spread. Two were given on afternoons, and six on evenings. Rehearsals were held during several of the mornings. This spreading out of the festival had an inconvenient side, but it fitted the convenience of the patrons, and probably of the executive resources.

At the first concert 'Elijah' absorbed the programme. It did not draw the great audience that was expected.

The second concert, on September 20, brought forward Dr. F. H. Cowen's new Cantata 'The Veil,' which was composed expressly for this festival. The 'Veil' has already been fully noticed in our columns (July and August, 1910). The words are taken from Buchanan's mystic poem 'The Book of Orm.' It is universally felt that Dr. Cowen has, in this work, risen to greater heights than he has hitherto scaled. The poem demands music of deep significance and imaginativeness, which Dr. Cowen, with his ripe experience of orchestral and vocal resources, has not failed to meet. At the performance the effect of the opening sections was marred by some false intonation, arising probably from the inconvenient high pitch used, and mood was rather lacking except as regards Mr. Herbert Brown's singing of the important baritone music. Then the music began to grow in interest. The soprano solo 'Earth, the mother,' with its beautiful instrumental introduction, was expressively sung by Miss Agnes Nicholls, and the first great climax at the words 'I am God, the Maker,' created its expected effect. The section entitled 'The dream of the world without death' displayed the composer's powers at their best. Later, the Mother's lament for the loss of her children made a deep impression because of poignancy. The duet 'The soul and the dwelling' proved to be, as was expected, one of the most attractive numbers of the work, and the conclusion of this part was elevated in its expression. Part III. ('Songs of seeking') has much variety of colour and some intensely dramatic expression. Here again Mr. Brown did splendidly. The choral music presents little or no difficulties, and is distinguished by lucidity and the melodiousness of the part-writing rather than by novelty of chordal progression. The end is tranquil, and breathes a spirit of resignation and hope. It was sung by the choir not so delicately as it deserves to be, but it did not fail to make a strong impression. Thus, on the whole, the production was a success that must have been gratifying alike to the composer and the resources engaged. Dr. Cowen was recalled with great ardour, and there is no doubt that the enthusiasm of the audience was sincere. The principals besides those named above were Madame Kirkby Lunn, Miss Dilys Jones, Mr. Walter Hyde, and Mr. W. E. Carston.

At the third concert, given on the 21st, the chief feature was Sir Alexander Mackenzie's cantata 'The Sun-God's return,' which was also composed for the festival and conducted by the composer. As a short account of this work was given in our last issue, it is not necessary to tell its story here. The subject is mythical: it deals with the improbable, and therefore makes considerable demands upon the imagination of the listener. The musical setting is an elaborate one, and on every page the accomplished musician is revealed. The opening chorus, in which the warriors and the people mourn the absence of the Sun-God, has an appropriately sombre colour. It introduces a soprano solo sung by Friga, which is a lamentation beautifully scored, and then the first dramatic climax occurs when Hermodur offers to journey to Helheim to endeavour to release the Sun-God. Arrived at his destination he sings a long duet with the Queen, which now and again rises to strong passion, but the action of which we think is impeded by the long pauses in the dialogue. Hermodur's mission being successful, Baldur, the Sun-God, returns to gladden the earth after his slayer has been killed. The earth awakens, the music grows more cheerful, and the accompaniment becomes lighter. The choral writing of this section is full of interest and vitality. The Finale is wrought out at considerable length, but the many masterly changes of tone-colour and rhythm that occur keep the attention alive. The composer received great applause at the conclusion. The soloists were Miss Perceval Allen, Miss Dilys Jones and Mr. Walter Hyde. A fine performance of the great duet from 'Siegfried' was given by Miss Allen and Mr. Hyde, and Liszt's 'Hungarian Rhapsody' in F, No. 1, concluded the concert.

On the fourth day there were two concerts. At the first Brahms's 'Requiem,' Schubert's 'Unfinished,' and Sir Hubert Parry's cantata 'The Pied Piper of Hamelin.' The choir showed pleasant vitality in performing their share of the work. Miss Perceval Allen, Mr. Ben Davies, and Mr. Ivor Foster were the soloists.

At the evening concert Strauss's 'Wanderer's Storm Song,' for chorus and orchestra, Mozart's Violin concerto in E flat (played admirably by M. Zacharewitsch), Mr. Frederic Cliffe's 'Ode to the North-East Wind,' a new cantata—or, as it was termed, Pindaric Ode—'The Bard,' for baritone solo, orchestra, and chorus, by Dr. David Thomas, were the leading features. Miss Amy Evans sang two solos very charmingly. 'The Bard,' which was composed for the festival and conducted by its composer, is a clever work, probably the most advanced produced by a Welsh composer. It is evident that Dr. Thomas was determined to shake off the trammels of the early-Victorian School, but he has gone too far in the other direction. His music is very restless in its tonality, and does not always give one the feeling that it is knit by any other nexus—the imagination not being controlled by judgment. But notwithstanding these inequalities the work reveals power, and it may very well be that a more mature use of the complex idiom adopted will result later in something of greater strength and unity. The choral portions are sometimes extremely difficult, but the choir loyally grappled with them, as did Mr. Ivor Foster with his solo part. At the conclusion, it was clear that Cardiff was proud of its young Welsh composer.

The concert of the 23rd brought forward Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater,' Mr. Hamilton Hart's symphonic poem 'With the wild geese' (a name earned by some militant Irishmen), Elgar's 'In the south' Overture, Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of praise,' and Strauss's 'Till Eulenspiegel's merry pranks.' At the final concert on the 24th, the 'Messiah' was announced for performance. These concerts cannot be reported in our present issue.

The Cardiff folk were very hospitable and attentive. The general secretary, Mr. W. A. Morgan, who wrote many of the analytical notes, made the business run very smoothly.

THE TOUR OF THE SHEFFIELD CHOIR.

Dr. Charles Harriss has returned to London after having visited Cape Town, Kimberley, Bloemfontein, Johannesburg, Pretoria, Maritzburg, and Durban. The meetings convened were largely attended in each centre. Executive committees were formed to welcome the 200 members of the Sheffield Choir, whom, together with Dr. Henry Coward, their conductor, Dr. Harriss is taking to South Africa next year. At Pretoria, Dr. Harriss was received in audience by His Excellency Lord Gladstone and the Prime Minister (General Botha). General Botha expressed his fullest sympathy with the coming visit of the Sheffield Choir to this dominion, and said that a warm welcome awaited the Yorkshire visitors. Lord Gladstone is president of the festivals to be given in South Africa. Prominent among citizens in support of musical recitativity, as set forth by its founder, were Sir Willem van Hulsteyn, who seconded the Mayor of Johannesburg in a vote of thanks to Dr. Harriss; Sir David Hunter, endorsing the action taken by the Mayor of Durban; and Mr. C. Botha, recently-elected member for Bloemfontein, who in a similar manner voiced the sentiments expressed by the Mayor of Bloemfontein.

His Worship the Mayor of Cape Town (Sir Frederick Smith) presided at the meeting held in the City Hall, after which Dr. Harriss sailed for England on the s.s. Edinburgh Castle.

HOME MUSIC STUDY UNION.

A most delightful and useful co-operative holiday was held under the auspices of this Society at Port Ballintrae, on the north coast of Ireland, from September 3 to 13. With ideal holiday surroundings the participants were not too much inclined to indulge in technical disputations or to talk 'shop,' in spite of the fact that out of a party of fifty some thirty were professional musicians and the rest belonged to that great body which stands on the dividing line between professional and amateur. Serious work was done however in the intervals between rambles and excursions made amid the most beautiful combinations of sea and landscape. Mr. Rutland Boughton, whose style of thought and expression are alike eminently fitted for such an occasion, delivered a series of four lectures on 'The need of music,' 'The law of beauty,' 'Craftsmanship' and 'Music and worship.' Dr. E. C. Bairstow gave some 'Hints on voice training' and a lecture on 'Brahms: as classic and romanticist.' Expositions of various methods and views were heard from those whose ideas differ from the majority, and the discussions among the whole body of visitors were extremely interesting. Among those present were members and non-members of the Society from all parts of England and Ireland, and old and young alike found interest and pleasure without allowing their artistic natures either to vegetate or to run to seed. The spirit of comradeship, which it is one of the chief aims of this Union to foster, was present throughout, and there was hardly a single member of the party who left without feeling that new friendships had been begun and new stimulants to thought and effort assimilated. The promotion of a concert for the edification of the inhabitants of the neighbourhood was the occasion of much fun as well as of serious practice of solo and concerted music. Romberg's 'Toy Symphony' was the pièce de résistance, but more serious, though shorter items, were in the majority. It is hoped that another such holiday will be arranged for next year, probably either in Scotland or the South of England. To ensure this, a guarantee fund, proposed and started by an unofficial member, was created, guarantees to the extent of nearly forty pounds being obtained.

We have received the following letter from the Secretary concerning the future operations of the Society:

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

SIR,—As the winter season is now approaching, will you again permit me to call the attention of your readers to the work of the above Union, which is described as 'a comradeship open to all who are interested in music, whether as performers or listeners, amateurs or professionals.' The Union, which is under the Presidency of Dr. W. H. Hadow, and the Vice-Presidency of Rev. Dr. Paton (founder of the University Extension Movement) and Dr. Arthur Somervell, carries out its aims by means of 'courses' of study which can be followed either by 'individual members' or in 'circles.' These courses are adapted to all classes of music-lovers, ranging as they do from a quite elementary to an advanced stage. The subjects treated this year are four, viz., 'Studies of Great Composers,' founded on Sir Hubert Parry's book; 'English Music,' articles by Dr. Ernest Walker and other eminent writers; 'Wagner,' conducted by Mr. Rutland Boughton; 'The Art of Music Teaching,' by Mr. T. J. Hoggett, Lecturer on Music in the Education Department of the University of Leeds. The study of the courses is directed by the Union's journal, The Music Student. The Union's general circular, and special circulars on 'How to form a music circle,' and 'Young people's circles in secondary schools,' may be obtained from me, or at the Union's London Offices, 12, York Buildings, Adelphi, London, W.C.

I remain, Yours, &c.,

63, Grange Avenue,
Leeds.

CARILLON MEETING AT MALINES.

At the International competitive festival held on August 21 and 22, the following were the awards: Competitions of August 21: 1, Jules Van de Plas, Louvain; 2, Alphonse Rolliers, St. Nicholas; 3, Ferdinand Redoute, Mons; 4, Karel de Mette, Alost; 5, A. Schynkel, Audenarde; 6, Emile Vereest, Turnhout. Competitions of August 22, for Prize of Honour given by the King of Belgium: 1, Alphonse Rolliers, for the Prize of Honour given by the 'Malines Attractions'; 2, Ferdinand Redoute. In these competitions Jules Van de Plas was awarded a certificate of honour. The festival concluded with a recital by M. Josef Denyn, the official carillonneur of the City of Malines. The programme included two items of particular interest. The first, an Air and Variations by W. W. Starmer, specially written for the recital, and most exquisitely played by M. Denyn. The air is simple and original, and the variations—contrapuntal and otherwise—bring into use the best effects the carillon is capable of, as well as affording excellent opportunities for the executive capabilities of the player. The second, a Prelude by the recitalist, also specially written for the occasion. Opening with brilliant bravura passages, this composition was a fitting conclusion to a veritable feast of good music played throughout as only such a master as M. Denyn can play. Both pieces were rapturously encored by an audience which must have numbered over 30,000 people.

THE PROMENADE CONCERTS.

Some remarkable playing has been heard at the Queen's Hall during the past month, especially in the more involved works that have appeared in the programmes. The Monday Wagner nights have consistently shown the Orchestra at its best. Among other noteworthy performances, those of Strauss's 'Tod und Verklärung' on August 31, Debussy's Nocturne 'Fêtes' on September 6, and Strauss's 'Till Eulenspiegel' on September 7 deserve mention.

On August 25 two works by American composers were given their first performance in London. These were a Suite for strings by Mr. Arthur Foote and the 'Song of the Shulamite' by Mr. Albert Mack, sung by Mr. Foster Salmond. Both compositions were well received.

On August 27 a novelty was presented in the shape of a 'Fantaisie Concertante' for viola and orchestra by Mr. J. Rogister, who is a professor at the Liège Conservatoire. It was welcome as an addition to the scanty repertoire of works for the viola. Its style indicated no desire to explore new idioms, or to discover new methods of procedure. The soloist was Mr. S. L. Wertheim, a member of the Orchestra. On the same night, the performance of César Franck's 'Hulda' ballet music called attention to an unfamiliar and delightful composition.

'In the faery hills,' an orchestral tone-poem by Mr. Arnold Bax, received its first performance on August 30.

The composer's oft-shown sympathy with Celtic legends of the 'little people' finds its fullest expression in this work. His skill and imagination in handling orchestral resources have enabled him to enwrap his music with a mystic glamour that could not fail to be felt by the listener. It argued nothing against the actual musical content of a work of this class that its coherence was not instantly discernible. At a first hearing the musicianship and imaginative fancy were the most obvious features.

A new Fantasia on English folk-songs, by Dr. Vaughan Williams, was played for the first time on September 1. It proved one of the most interesting and convincing of compositions in this form, over which the composer's previous efforts have given him mastery. The familiar themes were worked up with great knowledge of effect, without trickery, and vigorous handling, without destruction of their character, into a notable composition whose production was of peculiar interest at the present stage of agitation for nationalism in music.

On September 6 interest was aroused by the first performance in England of an orchestral suite by Alfred Bruneau, based upon his opera 'L'Attaque du Moulin.' Excerpts from the opera have been chosen and arranged in such an order as to present due contrast and sequence. The attractiveness of the work is based chiefly upon its pictorial elements and the vivid presentment, rather than the musical value, of its ideas. Its intelligibility and effectiveness justified the favourable reception that it received, but the quality of the music contrasted with the greater subtlety and keener musicianship displayed in the works of Cornelius, Debussy, and Macdowell that were included in the same programme—works no less intelligible and effective. Macdowell was represented by his Pianoforte concerto in D minor (Op. 23), played in spirited fashion by Mr. Cecil Baumer.

Two new orchestral compositions by Mr. H. V. Jervis-Reed, entitled 'Night-pieces,' were performed on September 8. In depicting ' that half sleep, half strife

(Strange sleep, strange strife) that men call living,' the composer has laid somewhat disproportionate stress upon the element of conflict, and his music frequently lost the sense of mystery and subtle suggestion that should envelop the high-lights as well as the shadows in a representation of night.

The performance on September 13, for the first time in London, of W. Y. Hurlstone's 'The magic mirror' Suite was a much-delayed act of justice. The composer of some of the finest chamber works ever produced by an Englishman had in a high degree the faculty of writing for the orchestra, although he made scant use of it during his short life. Hurlstone was scarcely out of his student days when he composed this Suite, and in the laying out there are semblances of crudity here and there, but the ideas and the orchestral expression of them are charming throughout. The music is outwardly programme-music, intended as an illustration of episodes from Grimm's well-known fairy-tale of 'Snow-white,' but it appeals chiefly as absolute music. Of its six sections the first two—'The step-mother looks in the mirror' and 'Snow-white in the wood'—were the most captivating. The Suite was received with enthusiasm that should provoke a repetition. On the same night Fauré's Suite 'Pélleas and Mélisande' was an additional attraction.

On September 14, Mr. O'Neil Phillips secured a success in César Franck's finely-conceived 'Variations symphoniques' for pianoforte and orchestra.

An interesting novelty was presented on September 15. This was a 'Study for orchestra,' entitled 'Voices,' written by Mr. Ernest Bryson, a Liverpool amateur who has previously shown a gift for thoughtful and refined musical expression with a leaning towards introspection. The new composition was an effort to depict the sensations of one who, gazing into the dying embers, recalls the voices of absent friends. As a mood-picture it owed its success to skilful handling of the orchestra. If the themes were not striking, they were for that reason in better accord with the spirit of rêverie. Every bar bore testimony to sincerity, earnestness, and musicianship. The audience showed an unusual sense of discrimination in the hearty applause they bestowed upon the composer.

At the same concert, Miss Elsie Horne gave an excellent interpretation of the solo part of Paderewski's A minor Pianoforte concerto.

An occasion of exceptional interest was the first performance in London, which took place on September 20, of Dr. Walford Davies's 'Festal Overture,' produced at the Lincoln festival in June. This magnificent work, so typical of its composer and his thoroughly English style, received an excellent performance and a fine reception such as it deserved.

OPERA PERFORMANCES.

An event which aroused considerable interest was the first performance in London of Goldmark's 'The Queen of Sheba,' which was given by the Carl Rosa Company at Kennington Theatre on August 29. The company had played the work several times in the provinces, and showed close acquaintance with their task. Miss Doris Woodall gave one of her best impersonations in the name-part, and Miss Beatrice Miranda, Miss Annie van Dyck, Mr. Walter Wheatley and others did well. Mr. Eugene Goossens conducted.

The same company, on September 2, gave the first performance in England of Verdi's 'La forza del destino,' under the direction of Mr. Van Noorden. The chief characters were taken by Miss Ina Hill, Miss Annie van Dyck, Mr. Walter Wheatley, Mr. Hebdon Foster, Mr. Arthur Winkworth and Mr. Frederick Clendon.

A season of light opera in Italian, organized and directed by Mr. C. de Macchi, opened at the Kingsway Theatre on September 1 with Rossini's 'Il barbiere di Siviglia,' of which a sprightly and artistic performance was given. On September 7, Auber's 'Fra Diavolo,' and on September 15, Donizetti's 'Don Pasquale' were mounted. The performances were in many ways excellent.

THE COMING SEASON.

ORCHESTRAL CONCERTS.

The phenomenal activity in this branch of concert-giving that has lately become a characteristic of London musical seasons, promises to exceed all records during the coming autumn, winter and, as far as we can tell, spring. Below we give particulars of the various orchestral enterprises that are announced:

The Philharmonic Society.—Seven concerts are announced, to be given under the following conductors: November 10, Sir Edward Elgar; November 30, Herr Emil Mlynarski; December 7, Mr. Thomas Beecham; February 9, Dr. Chessin; February 23, Mr. Albert Coates; March 9, M. Vincent D'Indy; May 18, Herr Arthur Nikisch. At the concert given on November 10, Sir Edward Elgar's new Violin concerto will be performed, with Herr Kreisler as soloist.

The Promenade Concerts.—This series, given by the Queen's Hall Orchestra under Mr. Henry J. Wood, is now in progress, and will continue every week-night until October 22.

Queen's Hall Symphony Concerts.—The usual series will be given with the Queen's Hall Orchestra under the direction of Mr. Henry J. Wood. The dates are as follows: October 22, November 5, November 19, December 3, January 21, February 4, February 18, March 11. The concerts take place in the afternoon.

London Symphony Orchestra.—This organization will give twelve symphony concerts at the Queen's Hall on the following dates: October 24, November 7 and 21, December 5, January 16 and 30, February 13, March 6 and 20, May 15 and 29, June 12. Eight will be conducted by Richter, three by Nikisch and one (January 16) by Herr Müller-Reuter.

New Symphony Orchestra.—A series of symphony concerts will be given by this orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Landon Ronald, on the following dates: November 16, December 14, January 18, February 14, March 29, May 2.

Sunday Concert Society.—With the co-operation of the Queen's Hall Orchestra, under Mr. Henry J. Wood, this Society have arranged to give twenty-six concerts on Sunday afternoons during the coming autumn and winter.

Royal Albert Hall Sunday Concerts.—The New Symphony Orchestra, under Mr. Landon Ronald, has been engaged to give concerts on Sunday afternoons from October 2 to April 9, omitting Christmas Day.

Sunday Concerts at Covent Garden Theatre.—These will be given by Mr. Beecham during the course of his opera season, with the help of the Beecham and other orchestras.

CHORAL CONCERTS.

The works chosen by London and Suburban Choral Societies for performance during the coming season are as follows:

Royal Choral Society (conductor Sir Frederick Bridge)—Elijah; Bach's Mass in B minor; Messiah; Hiawatha; Dream of Gerontius; King Olaf; the usual two performances of the Messiah.

Music in the Provinces.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.)

BIRMINGHAM.

With the exception of a series of vocal and instrumental concerts, given under Mr. Oscar Pollack's direction at the Edgbaston Botanical Gardens, the summer months have practically been devoid of musical events. An unusually early inauguration of the coming musical season was made by the first appearance here of Cavaliere F. Castellano's Italian Opera Company, who, on September 5, opened a week of opera at the Theatre Royal with a repertory that included 'Cavalleria Rusticana,' 'Pagliacci,' 'Rigoletto,' 'La Traviata,' 'Il Barbiere di Siviglia,' 'Il Trovatore,' 'Faust,' and 'Carmen.' The best performance was undoubtedly that of Rossini's master work. Italian opera in the vernacular has not been heard in Birmingham since 1893.

The coming season promises to be the busiest on record, so many new ventures being in prospect that it is almost doubtful if success will attend all the concerts, although they are likely to be of varied interest and excellence. Choral and orchestral music will naturally form the chief attraction, and in forecasting the season's principal events, the place of honour in the domain of choral works must again be assigned to the Birmingham Festival Choral Society, so ably conducted by Dr. Sinclair. This old-established association will, in addition to the customary Christmas performance of the 'Messiah,' provide four concerts. The works to be given are Bach's B minor Mass, Saint-Saëns's 'Samson and Delilah,' an important Handelian selection, and Elgar's 'Caractacus.' The dates of the concerts are fixed for October 20, November 24, 1910, February 23 and April 16, 1911.

Our chief amateur choral societies—the Midland Musical Society, the Birmingham Choral and Orchestral Association, the Birmingham Choral Union, and the local male-voice choirs—will all provide important choral music during the season, particulars of which have not yet been issued. Of special importance will be the concerts of the New Choral Society, trained and conducted by Mr. Rutland Boughton, who, on October 17, will submit a copious selection of unaccompanied choruses and part-songs. On March 9, 1911, the Society proposes to perform the three parts of Granville Bantock's 'Omar Khayyâm.' In addition to these a popular concert of Folk-songs will be given on some available Saturday night.

Orchestral music will principally be provided by the newly-established Birmingham Philharmonic Society, the promoters of which have made arrangements to give eight important orchestral concerts in the Town Hall on the following dates: October 19, November 2, November 16, December 14, 1910, February 1, February 15, March 1, and March 15, 1911. The conductors will be Messrs. Wassili Safonoff (two concerts), Fritz Cassirer, George Henschel, Landon Ronald, Thomas Beecham and Henry J. Wood (two concerts). A truly remarkable programme is to be given under Mr. Beecham's direction.

The old-established 'Harrison Concerts,' of which four are given every season, are again likely to attract enormous audiences. Among the principal artists will be Madame Tétrazini, Madame Melba and Fräulein Gerhardt. At the second concert Pachmann will give a pianoforte recital, and at the last concert the New Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Landon Ronald, will make its first appearance here.

Messrs. Dale, Forty & Co. have arranged to give two concerts, at which Mlle. Alice Verlet will make her first appearance in Birmingham. The other artists will be Kubelik, Zimbalist, Backhaus and Mark Hambourg. The Max Mossel drawing-room concerts will this season comprise many features of interest, and the Royal Society of Artists' musical matinees, which open on October 8, and will be continued every Saturday till December 10, are of more than ordinary attraction, judging from the syllabus issued. Chamber music will again rest with the Clifton Quintet, and in the way of operas, Thomas Beecham's Light Opera Company, the Moody-Manners Opera Company and the D'Oyly Carte Repertoire Company are all visiting the Prince of Wales Theatre before the end of the year. Herr Denhof proposes to give a complete performance of the 'King' and one performance of 'Elektra' at the Prince of Wales Theatre in March, 1911, providing that a sufficient number of subscriptions are forthcoming to cover, at least, the expenses. A few months ago a local committee was formed to arrange a performance of the 'Ring,' as proposed by Herr Denhof, but there was no response to the scheme and the matter fell through. What measure of success this new appeal will meet remains to be seen.

The Moseley Choral Society promise two concerts. On December 8 they will give a concert-performance of 'Faust,' and on March 16, 1911, Hubert Bath's 'The wedding of Shon Maclean' and a miscellaneous selection will form the programme.

BRISTOL.

The several Societies have recommenced their practices as follows: Bristol Choral Society (conductor, Mr. George Riseley), 'Hiawatha' (Coleridge-Taylor) and 'Dream of Gerontius' (Elgar). Bristol Musical Society (conductor, Mr. C. W. Star), 'The Crusaders' (Gade), 'Look at the clock' (Bath), and 'Redemption' (Gounod). Bristol New Philharmonic Society (conductor, Mr. Arnold Barter), 'The Childhood of Christ' (Berlioz) and 'Hymn of Praise' (Mendelssohn). Sine Nomine Choral Society (conductor, Mr. Robert Simmons), 'St. Paul' (Mendelssohn).

DEVON AND CORNWALL.

PLYMOUTH.

Arrangements are set in motion for the coming season which seem to indicate that from the point of view of quantity Plymouth will emerge from the appalling dullness of last year. It is exceedingly gratifying to note that the Municipal Council has at last acceded to the demands of the borough organist for the raising of prices at those municipal concerts at which the Guildhall choir shall perform—three in number during the season. It will be remembered that their refusal to grant this concession last year deprived the town of one of its most important musical assets, for without the raising of prices, the normal scale of which is from one shilling to one penny, it was impossible to give the fine choral and orchestral performances to which Mr. Moreton, the borough organist, had educated the musical Plymouth public on the platform and on the floor. Apparently the suspension of the choir, and consequently of the orchestra, has impressed itself with a significant sense of loss on the powers-that-be, and at the September meeting of the Council the recommendation of the Land Committee to accede to Mr. Moreton's request was accepted. The choir has since met for rehearsal in full force, and the works promised for performance are 'Trafalgar,' 'The last post,' 'Mors et vita' and (next season) 'The dream of Gerontius.' The other Societies are pulling themselves together after the summer recess, and among the events provided is the performance of 'Caractacus' by Dr. Weekes's Choral Society.

Mr. Frank Winterbottom having resigned, through ill-health, the bandmastership of the Royal Marine Light Infantry, Mr. J. W. Newton, of the Second Durham Light Infantry, has been appointed to succeed. He is a Kneller Hall man, and obtained his warrant six years ago. The Symphony concerts which Mr. Winterbottom has organized and conducted for many years now pass into the management and conductorship of Mr. R. G. Evans, bandmaster of the Royal Garrison Artillery, who will transfer the locale from the Stonehouse Town Hall to the Plymouth Guildhall, and will open the season in November. As a tribute of regard to Mr. Frank Winterbottom, a farewell concert was given on September 21 by the combined bands of the Royal Marine Light Infantry and the Royal Garrison Artillery, the retiring bandmaster and Mr. Evans sharing the duties of the baton. A presentation of a purse of money was made to Mr. Winterbottom on the initiative of the Plymouth Mercantile Association, with many expressions of appreciation of his past work and of regret at his departure. Mr. Winterbottom will remove to London at the end of this month.

CORNWALL.

Concerts given by London and other visiting artists on holiday have become quite a feature of the summer season at the Cornish sea-side places. Miss May Mukle gave a Violoncello recital at Bude and, with Miss Marjorie Beer and Mr. Thomas Dunhill, gave a chamber concert at even so remote a spot as Tintagel on August 20. St. Ives has been favoured also with organ recitals (Mr. Stanley Martin and Mr. David Parkes) and vocal recitals; and in a similar way Newquay, Falmouth and Carbis Bay have been enlivened.

EDINBURGH.

MR. DENHOF AND 'ELEKTRA.'

It seems that if Edinburgh, after having had the privilege of the first performance in the British provinces of Wagner's 'Ring of the Nibelung,' is to be also the first city, outside of London, which will hear Strauss's 'Elektra.' Mr. Denhof has secured the sole right of performance for the British provinces of this most modern of all modern works, and proposes to arrange a tour through the most important musical centres of the country, if the necessary support comes in.

Beginning with a matinée at the King's Theatre, Edinburgh, on February 18, 1911, he contemplates giving 'Elektra' performances in Manchester, Birmingham, Liverpool, Leeds, Sheffield, Newcastle, Glasgow, Belfast, Dublin, and perhaps some other places. In spite of the exorbitant expenses of the production of 'Elektra,' it is Mr. Denhof's intention to give the work on the same lavish scale as the 'Ring of the Nibelung' last spring; and it is interesting to note that Dr. Strauss, who naturally takes a great interest in the enterprise, is himself assisting Mr. Denhof in his not at all easy task of finding competent English singers. The performance in Edinburgh will not only be the first in the United Kingdom outside of London, but the first in English on any stage.

GLASGOW.

In forecasting the musical season the place of honour naturally falls to the Choral and Orchestral Union, whose scheme, commencing on November 15, will extend over a period of thirteen weeks and will include four choral and ten orchestral concerts as well as fourteen Saturday popular orchestral concerts. The appointment of Mr. Emil Mlynarski as orchestral conductor, in succession to Dr. Frederic Cowen, adds interest to the scheme, as does also the appearance of Sir Edward Elgar as conductor at the performance of 'The Kingdom,' which work will, on this occasion, be heard for the first time in Scotland. Mr. Mlynarski will also direct the Choral Union's performance of 'The Flying Dutchman,' and the two remaining choral concerts (Bach's Mass in B minor and 'The Messiah') will be conducted by Dr. Coward. The Scottish Orchestra will number eighty performers, with Mr. Henri Verbruggen as principal first violin.

Of other musical societies the following arrangements are announced: Pollokshields Philharmonic Society (Mr. John Cullen, conductor), Elgar's 'King Olaf' and the customary series of chamber concerts; the Bach Choir (Mr. J. M. Diack, conductor), the 'St. Matthew' Passion, 'God goeth up with shouting,' the eight-part motet 'Now shall the grace,' and two chamber concerts; Western Choral Union (Mr. Hugh S. Robertson, conductor), 'The Messiah,' Coleridge-Taylor's 'The death of Minnehaha,' and miscellaneous numbers; the Athenaeum Choral and Operatic Society (Mr. Henri Verbruggen, conductor), Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise,' Beethoven's 'Ruins of Athens,' and Flotow's 'Martha'; the Choral Institution connected with the Young Men's Christian Association (Mr. R. L. Reid, conductor), 'The Messiah,' 'The Creation,' and Wallace's 'Maritana'; Lenzie Musical Association (Mr. B. Sykes, conductor), 'The Creation'; the Glee and Madrigal Society (Mr. B. W. Hartley, conductor) and the Orpheus Choir (Mr. Hugh S. Robertson, conductor), miscellaneous choral numbers.

LIVERPOOL AND DISTRICT.

Coming events are beginning to cast their shadows, and there is every prospect of a busy if not eventful winter season. The principal choral societies have for some weeks past been engaged upon rehearsals which to many have come as a welcome relief from musical inaction, and the memory of a doleful summer. One naturally turns with interest to the prospectus of the Welsh Choral Union, which has achieved the reputation of being one of the finest bodies of singers in the Kingdom. The choice of choral works this season has fallen on Berlioz's 'Faust,' 'Elijah,' Handel's 'Acis and Galatea' and Bantock's 'Omar Khayyâm' (Parts II. and III.) for the first time in Liverpool. Part I. has already been sung by this fine choir, which owes so much to the ability and enthusiasm of its conductor, Mr. Harry Evans.

The Societa Armonica will give three concerts in the Philharmonic Hall, a locale which is now justified by the increasing importance of the Society's outlook. The large and excellent orchestra, made up of amateur and professional players, and including many ladies in the string department, are to offer several novelties, which include a Symphony (No. 2), in A (Kalinnikoff), Rachmaninoff's Pianoforte concerto (to be played by Mr. Douglas Miller, a local pianist and pupil of Godowsky), and Stanford's 'Irish' Symphony. It would appear that the Societa Armonica is to some extent taking the place of the defunct and lamented Orchestral Society which, under the enthusiastic direction of the late Mr. A. E. Rodewald, an amateur of exceptional gifts, achieved a record of musical enterprise and usefulness. In the welfare of the Societa Armonica are concerned at least two alert amateurs at one time associated with Mr. Rodewald, viz., the hon. sec., Mr. Dudley Johnston, and the hon. treasurer, Mr. H. Milner Brown.

An event which always arouses widespread attention is the annual festival of the Church Choir Association, of which the tenth festival will be held in St. George's Hall on November 17. The choir of some five hundred men and boys, selected from choirs of churches, accepted in priority of application, is now busy rehearsing. Mr. T. Tertius Noble, organist of York Minster, has accepted the invitation of the committee to be present and to conduct his Te Deum in B minor and unaccompanied anthem 'Fierce was the wild billow.'

The usual series of twelve concerts will be given by the Philharmonic Society, of which ten will be conducted by Dr. F. H. Cowen, the Society's conductor, and two by Mr. Henry J. Wood, whose readings of Tchaikovsky's Symphonies No. 4 and No. 5 are anticipated with interest. The choir will be heard in Dvorák's 'Spectre of the Bride,' the 'Messiah,' and Brahms's 'Requiem.' The features of the season will be chiefly instrumental, and will include performances of Schumann's Symphony No. 4, in D minor, Beethoven's C minor, and Strauss's tone-poem 'Don Juan.' With this latter will be contrasted Mozart's 'Don Juan' Overture, and Haydn's Symphony in B flat with the tone-picture 'Baba Jaga' by Liadoff. Music by English composers figures rather meagrely in the scheme: it is represented by Mr. German's 'Welsh Rhapsody,' Elgar's 'Variations' and 'From the Bavarian highlands,' and Cowen's 'Scandinavian Symphony.' Among the eminent players engaged are Sapellnikoff, Casals, Kreisler, René Chemet, Careño, and Bertha Marx, while among the vocalists appear the names of Mesdames Ackté, Julie Culp, Kirkby Lunn, Gerhardt, and Donalda, with MM. Sammarco, Paul Schmedes, and Plamondon.

It is satisfactory to note that a new series of eight concerts will be given by Mr. Vasco V. Akeroyd's Symphony Orchestra in the Philharmonic Hall, commencing on October 18. These concerts deserve well of the musical public, for they provide high-class programmes at popular prices. In addition to well-known symphonic works, the scheme includes Mr. Bantock's 'Old English Suite,' 'Song of evening' (J. B. Davis), 'Indian Suite' No. 2 (MacDowell), Symphony (A. von Ahn Carse); and on January 17, Sir C. V. Stanford will conduct his 'Ode to discord' and 'New songs of the sea,' sung by Mr. Plunkett Greene.

The enterprising local concert agents, Messrs. Rushworth & Dreaper, have recently completed a beautiful concert-room, with seating accommodation for about 200, which will no doubt be largely made use of for chamber concerts and musical recitals. Decorated in the Georgian style by Messrs. Waring & Gillow, this new and handsome addition to the none too numerous concert-rooms in this city will be inaugurated by two pianoforte recitals by Mr. Richard Buhlig, the first of which will be given on October 3.

The new Rushworth Hall will be the locale of three chamber concerts to be given by the Schiever Quartet, which includes Messrs. Ernst Schiever, Alfred Ross, J. Rimmer, and W. Hatton. Two concerts will also be given by a newly-formed small orchestra, the Victorian Court Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Gordon E. Stutely. The programmes are to be devoted to some of the lesser-known classical works, including Haydn's 'Military' and 'Surprise' Symphonies.

The Catholic Philharmonic Society, who made their debut last season with a performance of Horatio Parker's 'Hora Novissima,' will this season sing in the 'Dream of Gerontius,' Haydn's 'Passion' and Astorga's 'Stabat Mater.' On the latter occasion the orator will be Father Bernard Vaughan. The Methodist Choral Union have selected the 'Messiah' and 'Redemption.' The Post Office Choral Society announce the 'Creation,' and the newly-formed Walton Philharmonic, Sterndale Bennett's 'May Queen.'

Under the auspices of the Music Lectures Association six lectures will be given at the University by Mr. Filson Young, whose subjects will be the music to be performed during the season in Liverpool. Another interesting announcement concerns the proposed performances of Wagner's 'Ring of the Nibelungen' and Strauss's 'Elektra.' They are contingent upon a sufficient number of subscriptions being forthcoming to cover the expenses, which are estimated at about £4,300 for the five performances. Conducted by Dr. Hans Richter, the Hallé Orchestra will give two concerts on November 12 and January 14, and the usual series of four Harrison concerts will also appear to a large extent.

Mr. Egon Petri announces four pianoforte recitals in the Institute, Mount Street, commencing October 20, and Mr. William Faulkes, the eminent Liverpool organist and composer, will give a Chopin pianoforte recital on October 5.

The Liscard Orchestral Society, a flourishing organization conducted by Mr. Philip Smart, are to give three concerts, at which will be performed Mr. William Wallace's symphonic poem 'The passing of Beatrice,' which Mr. Bantock played with success at his memorable concerts at New Brighton Tower. The four concerts announced by the Warrington Musical Society are to include the 'Dream of Gerontius,' 'Faust' (Berlioz), and the 'Messiah.'

MANCHESTER AND DISTRICT.

From announcements made up to the time of going to press the musical season here will probably be opened by the first Harrison concert, when Tetrassini will be the attraction; not improbably, however, Pachmann, at the December concert of this series, will draw a more seriously-musical audience, and a warm welcome will await Gerhardt for her Lieder recital; the concluding concert, affording an opportunity of hearing Melba, with Landon Ronald's orchestral accompaniment, will also be of unusual interest.

Mr. G. W. Brand Lane's concerts, at which his Philharmonic Society always sing, are seven in number this season, and promise the usual 'stars' of the musical firmament. To his first concert come Sir Charles Santley, Kubelik and Backhaus, Zerola, Alice Verlet, and Edna Thornton. A song-recital by Plunkett Greene, with Sir C. V. Stanford at the pianoforte, should prove of unusual interest. The only oratorios to be given are 'Messiah' and 'Elijah,' with attractive casts of soloists. In addition the choir, numbering 250 voices, are announced to sing Bach's 'Praise the Lord,' S. Sebastian Wesley's 'Praise of music,' Bantock's 'The tiger' and 'The moon has risen,' and other alla cappella works.

At a meeting held on September 14, Mr. Brand Lane referred to the completion of thirty years' work of the Philharmonic choir. Formed in the year 1880, it has, with the exception of three weeks in August, continued its weekly meetings, both winter and summer, during the whole of that time—an unusual feature with large choral societies, which generally slacken off during the summer months. From the first the choir has always worked on educational lines, having had each season graded classes for sight-reading, theory and choral practice, which have been attended by about 8,000 students. Nearly 1,500 have passed into the concert choir. Fifty per cent. of the present members have been so for eight years, but of the original members only two remain. Several of the officers have held their appointments for nearly twenty years, and the conductor has not missed a performance or been late at rehearsal since the choir was inaugurated. There is about £300 in hand to the credit of the Society.

Commencing October 22, the Manchester Orchestra, Limited, under Mr. Simon Speelman, will give a dozen Promenade smoking-concerts at intervals of three weeks, and from the sketch-programme already issued there are promised several novelties which should still further increase the popularity of this institution, which has at last made Saturday night orchestral concerts in Manchester pay their way. Many others have tilted this field of musical activity, but Mr. Speelman's band alone have reaped the harvest. Four new orchestral works by resident Manchester musicians, and all of them members of the Hallé organization, will receive their first hearing, although 'trial trips' have been run at Blackpool and Llandudno this season. Messrs. Oskar Borsdorf and Charles H. Fogg are represented by Concert overtures in D major and D minor respectively; Mr. Ferruccio Bonavia by a String suite in A minor, and Mr. J. H. Foulds by the new 'French Holiday Sketches.' Two plebiscite programmes are to be arranged, and a score of solo vocalists and instrumentalists will appear, who, with possibly four exceptions, are connected with Manchester and two or three other Lancashire centres; whilst at the first February concert, Manchester's greatest choir—the Male-Voice Orpheus Society, conducted by Mr. Walter S. Nesbitt, will sing. On October 19 also this choir will give a recital of alla cappella works of the greatest interest, Mr. Frederick Dawson playing pianoforte solos and the vocalists being Mrs. Herbert-Hutchinson and Mr. Harold Wilde.

The first Hallé concert is announced for October 20, but the published scheme has not been issued in time to be dealt with in this month's issue. Consideration of the syllabus of the Gentlemen's concerts must also be deferred, Mr. Henry J. Wood conducting the first orchestral concert on October 24.

The fourth session of a training class for music-teachers, instituted by Dr. Walter Carroll, will commence on October 13. Mr. Francis Harford will lecture on 'Singing as I try to teach it'; Dr. H. H. Hulbert on 'The science of vocal tone'; Mr. Max Mayer and Mr. Percy Waller on 'Pianoforte teaching.'

By the end of September it was hoped that it would be possible to decide definitely whether the Denhof scheme for the Nibelung dramas could go forward next March. The Theatre Royal authorities, it is stated, have given him the refusal of their premises for the week commencing March 6. The Ring dramas will entail an expenditure of £3,500, and if a further £800 be forthcoming, it is also proposed to perform Strauss's 'Elektra' on March 11.

During the last week in September, at the Midland Theatre, lovers of the out-of-the-common musical sensations enjoyed a novelty in the shape of the Balalaika orchestra, playing Russian folk-songs on native instruments, under Mr. Victor Abaza, Madame Polozoff, from the St. Petersburg Imperial Opera, also taking part.

NEWCASTLE AND DISTRICT.

Professor Bantock, on November 30, will conduct Parts II. and III. of 'Omar Khayyâm' and his comedy-overture 'The pierrot of the minute.' The Choral Union and the Hallé Orchestra will unite forces, and the soloists will be Miss Phyllis Lett, Mr. Frank Mullings and Mr. Herbert Brown. The usual Christmas performance of the 'Messiah' will be conducted by the chorus-master, Dr. Coward, and Bach's B minor Mass will be given again on March 22, conducted by that fine Bach scholar, Sir Hubert Parry. The orchestra will be the Leeds Symphony, and the soloists Miss Gladys Honey, Madame Amy Dewhurst, and Messrs. Henry Brearley and Montague Borwell. The Postal Telegraph Choral Society promise a programme of solid strength: Rutland Boughton's

'Midnight,' Coleridge-Taylor's 'The death of Minnehaha,' Bach's 'My spirit was in heaviness,' Max Reger's 'Palm-Sunday morning' (the first Reger choral music to be heard here), and H. O. Anderton's 'Flower-de-Luce.' Miss Lillie Wormald and Mr. Norman Allin are the soloists for the first concert, and Miss Gladys Honey and Messrs. J. Booth and E. J. Potts for the second. There will be an orchestra at each concert, and Mr. E. L. Bainton will conduct.

The Durham Musical Society will also sing the 'Minnehaha' cantata and Bennett's 'May Queen,' and the Chester-le-Street Society Handel's 'Judas Maccabæus.' Dr. Davies's 'Everyman' and part-songs by Delius (soloists, Miss G. Jacobson, Madame Dewhurst and Messrs. R. Ripley and Charles Knowles), a Christmas performance of the 'Messiah,' and Handel's 'Israel in Egypt' (soloists, Misses I. Walton and R. Burn and Mr. H. Brearley) are announced by the Whitley Bay Choral Society; and the Students' Choral Society, at the Armstrong College, Newcastle, intend rehearsing both Brahms's and Goetz's settings of Schiller's 'Nanie,' some North-country folk-songs, and possibly Mozart's 'Vesper psalms and Magnificat.'

The old-established Chamber Music Society will give their customary six concerts, and announce, among other arrangements, visits from Ysäye and Busoni, the Russian Trio, and the Brussels Quartet. The Classical Concert Society will give four concerts: a violoncello and pianoforte recital by Señor Casals and Mr. Kelly, a recital by Mr. Leonard Borwick and Miss Meta Diestel, an evening of Ravel and Franck (chiefly given by M. Ravel himself and the Parisian Quartet), and an evening devoted to pianoforte quintets by Schubert and Goetz and a Handel trio for violin, violoncello and double-bass.

The Harrison Concerts pursue their policy of presenting 'stars,' Tetrizzini, Pachmann, Melba, and the most interesting of all, Miss Elena Gerhardt. The New Symphony Orchestra will appear at the Melba concert.

No fewer than five musical lectures appear in the miscellaneous course of the Literary and Philosophical Society: Dr. Hadow on 'Schumann's songs,' Rutland Boughton on 'Wagner,' Mr. W. W. Starmer on 'Bells and bell-tones,' Mr. A. P. Graves on 'A night with Irish fairies,' and Miss Paget on 'Musical realism.' We are also promised visits from the Castellano Italian Opera company and Mr. Thomas Beecham's company.

NOTTINGHAM AND DISTRICT.

One work looms large on the musical horizon in Nottingham this season: Bach's B minor Mass. The other items in the Sacred Harmonic Choral programme are Elgar's 'Caractacus,' and the somewhat hackneyed third acts of 'Tannhäuser' and 'Lohengrin.' In their orchestral programme the same Society are giving an 'English night,' and later a modern programme with Dvorák's 'From the New World' for the chief attraction.

The Nottingham Subscription Concerts have engaged the Hallé Orchestra (Dr. Richter), with Mesdames Kirkby Lunn, Ada Crossley and Donalda as the leading artists at their four concerts. The New Musical Society at Leicester are rehearsing Sullivan's 'Festival Te Deum' and the 'Golden Legend,' Mendelssohn's 'Athalie,' '13th Psalm,' 'To the sons of art' and 'Lorelei.' The Philharmonic Society at Leicester, with Mr. W. J. Bunney as conductor, give Haydn's 'Creation,' with three concerts to follow, at which Madame Clara Butt and Madame Melba are to appear. Romberg's 'Lay of the bell,' Jackson's 'The year' and Mendelssohn's 'Lauda Sion' are to be produced by the Leicester West End Choral Society, and the Symphony concerts include the 'Egmont' overture and Beethoven's fourth Symphony in their programme. The Lincoln Musical Society are studying Elgar's 'King Olaf,' and 'Elijah,' and the Market Rasen Choral Society will give a concert performance of Gounod's 'Faust.'

At Loughborough, the Parish Church Choral Society propose as the season's programme Gounod's 'Mors et Vita,' Spohr's 'Last Judgment,' and Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater'; and the Town Choral Society are wavering between Elgar's 'King Olaf' and Coleridge-Taylor's 'Scenes from Hiawatha.' At Boston (Lincs.) Elgar's 'Banner of St. George' will be put into rehearsal.

SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

The triennial Musical festival, which is to take place during the last week of April, 1911, appears to be having the effect of stimulating rather than of paralysing local musical enterprise. According to announcement of plans made, the forthcoming season promises to be the busiest on record. Nearly forty important concerts and several dozen smaller ones are to be heard during the winter months.

The chief choral societies have issued their prospectuses. The Amateur Musical Society will perform, for the first time in Sheffield, Liszt's 'St. Elizabeth,' in December, under the direction of Mr. Henry J. Wood. At the spring concert in March 'The Golden Legend' will be given, conducted by Mr. J. A. Rodgers.

The Musical Union will introduce to Sheffield Sir A. C. Mackenzie's 'The Sun-God's return,' at their first subscription concert. The composer will conduct. The 'Messiah' will be given in December and, later, Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha,' both directed by Dr. Coward.

The Orchestral Promenade Concerts will be carried on in the Albert Hall, with Mr. J. A. Rodgers in command of an orchestra of sixty professional players. The first concert will be devoted mainly to Wagner's music, the second to the classics (Beethoven, Bach, Mozart, Mendelssohn), the third to Tchaikovsky, and the fourth will be miscellaneous. The programmes include three symphonies and three concertos.

An interesting experiment is to be tried by the Grand Opera Society, an amateur body conducted by Mr. J. Duffell. The principal theatre in the city has been taken for a week, and three performances each of Verdi's 'Aida' and Gounod's 'Faust' will be given. All the soloists are drawn from the ranks of the Society.

The plan of combining the choral societies of Doncaster and Rotherham in large-scale concerts is to be repeated. Mr. T. Brameld, who conducts both organizations, will direct joint performances in each town of the 'Dream of Gerontius.'

The Choral Union, an old-established body, is busy rehearsing 'Judas Maccabæus' for performance in December, directed by Mr. H. Reynolds.

The Victoria Hall Choral Society (conductor, Mr. H. C. Jackson) announces performances of 'King Olaf,' 'Hymn of Praise,' 'Messiah' and 'Judas Maccabæus.'

The Sheffield Chamber Music Society has arranged to bring some well-known quartet parties to the city, among them the Brodsky, Klingler and Nora Clench Quartets, also the Manchester Trio, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Withers, Miss Tosta de Benici and Miss Marjorie Hayward.

The local concert agents promise visits from the Richter and New Symphony Orchestras, Mesdames Tetrizzini, Clara Butt, Melba, Messrs. De Pachmann, Kreisler, Harold Bauer and others.

YORKSHIRE.

THE LEEDS SEASON.

Music in Yorkshire is at present the music of the future. So far as Leeds is concerned, the prospects of the coming season suggest a diminution of activity, for the results of the last one were not very encouraging. The Leeds Philharmonic concerts will be reduced from six to four, but it is satisfactory to note that their quality will suffer no deterioration. At the first of the series Dr. Richter will conduct the 'Choral Symphony' and a number of extracts from 'Parsifal'; at the last Mr. Safonoff and the London Symphony Orchestra will be heard in a Tchaikovsky programme, including the F minor Symphony and the B flat minor Pianoforte concerto, with Mr. Frederick Dawson as the soloist. The Christmas concert will, as usual, be given up to 'The Messiah,' and the remaining programme will couple with Sullivan's 'Golden Legend' Mr. Hubert Bath's humorous cantata 'The wedding of Shon Maclean.' These two concerts will be conducted by Mr. Fricker, and the Leeds Symphony Orchestra is engaged to take part in them—a welcome sign that Leeds can now depend on its own resources in this important matter. The Leeds Choral Union, of which Dr. Coward is the conductor, is also reducing its number of concerts from four to three, at which it is proposed to give Saint-Saëns's 'Samson and Delilah,' 'Elijah,' and 'The Dream of Gerontius.' The eighth season of the Saturday evening Municipal Orchestral Concerts, which are doing a great work in popularising the best orchestral music and developing a thoroughly efficient local permanent orchestra of professional musicians, promises a very interesting series of programmes. At the ten concerts it is intended to give all the best-known overtures of Beethoven and Wagner in chronological order, and symphonies by Mozart, Beethoven, Brahms and Tchaikovsky, together with Goldmark's 'Rustic wedding' Symphony, which is new to this part of the world. Concertos and other works for a solo instrument and orchestra by Bach, Beethoven, Liszt, Brahms, Saint-Saëns and Tchaikovsky are included, and native composers will receive a due share of attention. Not the least satisfactory feature of the scheme is the fact that practically all the performers, solo and orchestral, belong to the locality, which speaks well for the musicianship of Leeds, while, as a series ticket for the ten concerts can be obtained for 7s. 6d. up to £1 1s., and a single admission from 6d. to 2s. 6d., this music will be available to all classes of the population. At Messrs. Haddock's 'Musical evenings,' Mark Hambourg, Pachmann, Cernikoff and Mr. Waddington Cooke will be the solo pianists, Zimbalist and Mr. Edgar Haddock the violinists. The prospectuses of the two principal series of chamber concerts—the Leeds Bohemian and Kasch Quartets—have not yet been issued, but a new series has been arranged by the Leeds Trio, who promise chamber music by some of the most interesting modern composers: César Franck, Debussy, Chausson, Borodine, and Samazeuilh, in addition to works by Beethoven, Schubert and Brahms which may be reckoned as classics.

Foreign Notes.

BERLIN.

The opera performances given under the management of Herr Hermann Gura at the Neues Königliches Operntheater came to an end on August 15, when Wagner's 'Die Meistersinger' was very efficiently performed, under the conductorship of Herr Joseph Stransky. Though coldly received at first, this conductor has, by excellent work, greatly added to his reputation, and the success obtained by the Gura opera is no doubt largely due to his untiring efforts. On the following evening the ensemble of the Royal Opera commenced its winter season in the same theatre (the Royal Opera Theatre being temporarily closed for repairs). The authorities of the Royal Theatre made a somewhat belated observance of the Schumann centenary with a performance (on September 1) of Byron's 'Manfred,' with Schumann's incidental music.—Gounod's early and long-forgotten comic opera 'Der Arzt wider Willen' was given for the first time on September 3 at the Komische Oper. The work was efficiently performed under the baton of Herr von Reznicek, and earned much praise from the critics and public.—The series of Symphony concerts given by the Königlich Kapelle, under the musical direction of Dr. Richard Strauss, commences on October 3. Besides Beethoven's nine Symphonies, modern works by Pöhlitz, Ernst Boehe, Debussy, Bischoff and S. von Hausegger will be performed. The list also includes all the symphonic works of Dr. Richard Strauss himself.

BRUSSELS.

The Théâtre Royal de la Monnaie commenced its season on September 1 with a fine performance of Meyerbeer's opera 'L'Africaine.' Excellent representations have also been given of Puccini's 'Madama Butterfly' and Massenet's 'Manon.'

CASSEL.

The Court Theatre, whose Autumn season has recently commenced, has given as the first novelty Wolf-Ferrari's little comic opera 'Susannen's Geheimnis.' The charming work met with a favourable reception.

OPENHAGEN.

The Royal Theatre opened its doors on September 1. The operatic repertoire has so far mainly been occupied by Italian works such as 'Tosca,' 'Il Barbiere di Siviglia' and the old French opéra-comique, 'Jeannettes Bryllup' ('Les noces de Jeannette'). The ballet is a great specialty at the Royal Theatre, its last year's success, 'Den lille Havfrue,' with Fini Henriques' excellent music, having again been mounted. No national work has for many years met with equal favour. The New Theatre has been fortunate with its most recent production, Lehár's latest operetta 'Zigöjnerblod.' The critics generally agree that this work is on a far higher plane than any of the composer's previous works, and it is freely compared with the almost classical operettas by Johann Strauss.

DRESDEN.

As the Royal Opera House is temporarily closed for extensive alterations, the operatic performances have recently been given at the Königliches Schauspielhaus. As this theatre is too small to be completely suitable for grand opera, the authorities have decided, in addition to performing familiar examples of light opera, to give performances of some of the best operettas. The first venture of this kind, Johann Strauss's 'Der Zigeunerbaron,' given with the well-known singers under the conductorship of Herr Kutzschbach, proved quite a sensational success. The work, which Johann Strauss originally wrote for the Imperial Opera in Vienna, was for once heard under proper conditions. Among the promised novelties none excites greater interest than Richard Strauss's new opera 'Der Rosenkavalier,' which is to be produced late in January. In accordance with the composer's wish, Fräulein Eva von der Osten and Herr Lordmann will create the leading parts, and Herr Ernst von Schuch will conduct.

GENEVA.

Professor E. Jaques-Dalcroze, the distinguished composer and inventor of a system of rhythmic gymnastics, was recently created 'Docteur des lettres honoris causa' by the Geneva University.

LEIPSI.

A four-act opera, 'Der Talisman,' composed by Mrs. Adela Madison to the text of Ludwig Fulda, has been accepted for production at the Municipal Theatre. The composer, an American lady, has studied composition with Debussy.

MANNHEIM.

The Court Theatre opened the season with a performance of Kleist's drama 'Käthchen von Heilbronn,' with incidental music by Hans Pfitzner.

MUNICH.

The last six Symphony concerts of the series given by the Münchener Konzertverein (conductor, Herr Ferdinand Löwe), took place on August 22, 24, 27, 31, September 2 and 4. The programmes included the last four Symphonies by Beethoven, Symphonies Nos. 1, 2, 3 of Brahms, and the third, fourth, seventh and ninth Symphonies by Bruckner.—The annual festival performances of works by Wagner and Mozart have taken place in the Prinzregententheater and the Residenztheater before crowded and enthusiastic audiences. The Wagner works presented were 'Tristan und Isolde,' 'Die Meistersinger,' the 'Ring des Nibelungen' and the early opera 'Die Feen.' The amount of labour spent on the production of the last-mentioned work seemed to have been hardly worth while. The Mozart performances in the Residenztheater included 'Don Giovanni,' 'Le nozze di Figaro,' 'Così fan tutte,' 'Die Entführung aus dem Serail,' the opera-seria 'Titus,' which in spite of many beauties must be considered antiquated, and the charming little German operetta 'Bastien und Bastienne' (which Mozart wrote in his thirteenth year). The works of both masters were excellently performed, particularly on those occasions when Herr Felix Mottl officiated at the conductor's desk.—On September 12, the eagerly anticipated first performance of Gustav Mahler's eighth Symphony took place in the Neue Musik Festhalle of the Exhibition, under the direction of the composer. A great number of the most famous living musicians were present, among them Dr. Richard Strauss. The work is conceived on a gigantic scale. It takes an hour and a-half to perform, and is laid out for eight solo voices, three choirs (one a children's choir), and an orchestra numbering about 140 performers, and including mandolines, bells, glockenspiel, celesta, pianoforte, harmonium and organ. It is written in two parts, the first to the words of the great catholic invocation 'Veni Creator Spiritus,' and the second to the apotheosis of the second part of Goethe's 'Faust.' The work was received with the greatest enthusiasm. From a technical point of view, it no doubt is an enormous achievement. The scoring, even in spite of the example of Richard Strauss, is a marvel of beauty and brilliancy. Whether the composer's ideas are on a plane with his technical mastery is a matter upon which opinions are far from being unanimous.

OSTEND.

A festival concert devoted to Hungarian music took place at the Kursaal on August 18, under the direction of Professor Jenő Hubay, from Buda-Pest, well known as a violinist. Goldmark's overture, 'An den Frühling,' the symphonic-poem 'The Siren,' by Edmund von Mikalovich, Akos von Buttykay's Symphony in C sharp minor, and the prelude to Professor Hubay's own opera, 'Moharozsa,' were played, and heard with much interest. On August 26 an interesting programme included the symphonic-poem 'Phaëton,' by Saint-Saëns, Charpentier's suite 'Impressions d'Italie,' and Elgar's Enigma Variations, described in Le Guide Musical as 'les merveilleuses Variations d'Elgar.' M. Léon Rinskopf conducted. As usual, numerous well-known Italian vocalists have been heard during the season; among them were Signori Caruso, Zerola, Amato, and Signorina Edith de Lys.

PARIS.

The Opéra-Comique re-opened on September 1. Among the more notable performances that have been given, those of Claude Terrasse's 'Le Mariage de Télémaque,' Massenet's operas, 'Manon' and 'Werther,' Lalo's 'Le Roi d'Ys,' and 'La princesse jaune,' by Saint-Saëns, deserve mention.

PESARO.

The new opera 'Aura,' by Amilcare Zanella (the successor of Pietro Mascagni as principal of the Rossini Conservatoire) was recently produced with great success.

PRAGUE.

The Deutsche Landestheater commenced its season on August 18—the Emperor Franz Joseph's birthday. Two new works, Ernst von Dohnányi's pantomime ballet (Tanzpantomime) 'Der Schleier der Pierrette,' and E. Wolf-Ferrari's intermezzo (opéra-comique) 'Susannen's Geheimnis,' were given for the first time with considerable success.

ST. PETERSBURG.

The seventh international competition for the Rubinstein prize commenced on August 22. Two prizes of 5,000 francs were offered for composition and for pianoforte playing. The two successful competitors were two German musicians, Herr Emil Frey (as composer) and Herr Alfred Hoehn, professor at the Hoch'sche Konservatorium in Frankfurt (as pianist). Diplomas for excellence in pianoforte playing were awarded to Messrs. Arthur Rubinstein, Emil Frey and Alexandre Borowsky. The Board of Examiners consisted of only Russian musicians.

SALZBURG.

Last month the artistic success of the great Mozart festival was placed on record. We are now shown the reverse side of the picture, which reveals a loss of over 20,000 kronen (over £600).

WEIMAR.

The Grand Duke of Sachsen-Weimar has nominated Hofkapellmeister Peter Raabe as Custos of the Liszt Museum, in succession to the late Hofrat Dr. Aloys Obst.

The Aberdeen Choral Union, conducted by Mr. Arthur Collingwood, have decided to devote their attention to smaller choral works and to give, in the main, miscellaneous programmes during the coming season. At their fourth concert, however, Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of praise' and Stanford's 'Last post' will be performed.

The annual mid-winter concert of the students of the Conservatorium of Music of the University of Melbourne was given in the Town Hall on July 20, before a large audience, including His Excellency the Governor, who is the Visitor of the University. The programme included the following items: movements from Pianoforte concertos by Beethoven, Schumann and Mendelssohn, Mozart's A major Violin concerto, Wieniawski's Violin polonaise, a Chopin impromptu, and a Liszt rhapsody; 'Che farò,' 'Dove sono,' and songs by Schumann, Goring Thomas, &c. The University Council has reappointed Professor Peterson to the Ormond Chair of Music for a further period of five years from March, 1911.

At the examination for scholarships held at the London College of Music on September 14, the following awards were made: Schubert scholarship (singing), Mabel Amelia Mann; Rossini scholarship (singing), Reginald G. Lucas; Sullivan scholarship (singing), Helene Frank; Beethoven scholarship (pianoforte), Hilda Josephine V. Bradly; Spohr scholarship (violin), Doris M. Bedford; Bach scholarship (organ), Harold C. Pennington. Each scholarship entitles to two years' free training at the College. The examiners were Mr. Ernest Austin, Dr. Leonard Fowles, Mr. G. Augustus Holmes, Mr. Matthew Kingston, Dr. Frederick J. Karn, Mr. C. Hutchins Lewis, Mr. Sterling Mackinlay, and Mr. Henry W. Weston.

A plébiscite programme was performed on September 3 by the band of the Carnegie Dunfermline Trust. The full repertoire of the band was issued in the form of a pamphlet, divided under the headings 'Marches,' 'Overtures,' 'Waltzes,' 'Operatic selections,' 'Fantasias on national melodies,' and 'Miscellaneous.' The public were asked to select one piece from each group. The resulting programme was as follows:—March, 'Entry of the Gladiators' (Fucik); operatic selection, 'Lohengrin' (Wagner); waltz, 'Vision of Salome' (Joyce); overture solennelle, '1812' (Tchaikovsky); suite, 'Peer Gynt' (Grieg); national fantasia, 'Scotland's Pride' (Godfrey).

The Oriana Madrigal Society, whose object is to extend interest in English madrigals of the 16th and 17th centuries, both by performance and by publication, have issued a prospectus detailing their activities for the coming season. The usual concerts will take place, and at a special carol-concert to be given at Leighton House on December 17, old carols and Christmas motets and Bach's cantata 'Jesu, now we will praise Thee,' will be performed. Purcell's 'Ode on St. Cecilia's Day' has been chosen for a concert to be given in March. Mr. Charles Kennedy Scott is the conductor.

The Free Church Musicians' Union have arranged a busy season. The following lectures are announced: October 25, Mr. J. E. Leah on 'Divers opinions on matters vocal'; November 29, Mr. Thomas Facer on 'Organists and organizing'; January 9, Dr. Keighley on 'Descriptive music'; February 27, Mr. Arthur Berridge on 'Papa Haydn'; March 28, Mr. Leonard Snow on 'The service of praise.' Concerts, dinners and other meetings are arranged. The president is Dr. F. N. Abernethy.

The Russhen Town Male Choir paid a special visit to the North London Club and Institute on August 27, when they gave a concert to an attentive and appreciative audience. The programme, which was artistically carried out, included 'Comrades' song of hope,' 'The oath,' 'Where lies the land,' 'Martyrs of the arena,' 'O peaceful night,' 'Sweet doth blush,' and 'The long day closes.' The concert was organized by Mr. Bernard Tomkins, who also ably conducted.

At the Parish Church, Tenby, on September 15, an admirable performance of Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of praise' was given, the treble solos being sung by Master Donald Williams, principal solo boy, Westminster Abbey, and the other solos by members of the choir. Mr. W. Cecil Williams presided at the organ.

At a general meeting of the Walton Philharmonic Society, on September 8, it was announced that two concerts would be given during the coming winter, and that the work adopted for the first of these, to be held before Christmas, was Sterndale Bennett's 'The May queen.' The conductor is Mr. Albert Orton.

In giving their usual series of concerts during the coming season, the London Trio will perform Beethoven's Pianoforte trios in chronological order. On occasions these excellent players will combine with other well-known artists in the performance of pianoforte quartets and quintets.

An Old College Choristers' Musical Society has been formed at Cambridge. All those to whom the above title appeals are invited to become members or to lend their assistance and co-operation. The secretary is Mr. H. E. King, 140, Sedgwick Street, Cambridge.

The Nottingham Sacred Harmonic Society, who have the privilege of being conducted by Mr. Allen Gill, have arranged to perform 'Caractacus,' the 'Messiah,' the third acts of 'Tannhäuser' and 'Lohengrin,' and Bach's Mass in B minor during the coming season.

Colonial News.

BRIEFLY SUMMARIZED.

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed in this summary, as the notices are either prepared from local newspapers or furnished by correspondents.
Correspondents are particularly requested to enclose a programme when forwarding reports of concerts.

ADELAIDE.—A performance of Sullivan's 'The golden legend,' given at the Elder Hall on August 8 by the University Choral Class and Conservatorium Orchestra, earned enthusiastic praise from the Press and public. Mr. Frederick Bevan, who conducted, is an ardent admirer of Sullivan, and gave an intimate interpretation which the efficiency of the forces under his control enabled him to carry out to the full. The soloists were Misses Muriel Cheek, Clara Mueller, Gwen Lewis, Mary Roach and May Forsaith; Messrs. Walter Wood, A. Cooper, Edwin Rundle and F. Halls, among whom the various characters were subdivided. Mr. Hurtle Coombe was the organist and Miss Sylvia Whittington led the orchestra.

CHRISTCHURCH, NEW ZEALAND.—On August 2, the Christchurch Musical Union gave the second concert of their winter season. In a programme that was mainly orchestral, the chief numbers were the slow movement of Beethoven's second Symphony, Mendelssohn's 'Hebrides' overture, and Cowen's 'Suite de ballet.' Excellent performances were given under the direction of Dr. Bradshaw, and a large audience testified the pleasure of listening to them. The vocalists of the occasion were Miss Allison and Mr. Allwright.—To the regret of musicians living in this neighbourhood, the City Council have decided that the permission hitherto granted for the giving of Sunday concerts shall in the future be withheld.

INVERCARGILL (NEW ZEALAND).—A choral and orchestral concert was given by the Invercargill Musical Union at the Municipal Theatre on July 12. The choral programme included Faning's 'How sweet the moonlight sleeps,' Hatton's 'Over hill, over dale,' Forde's madrigal, 'Since first I saw your face,' and Elgar's suite 'From the Bavarian Highlands.' The orchestra, besides accompanying, played excerpts from Grieg's 'Peer Gynt' Suite and Weber's 'Preciosa.' Excellent performances were given throughout under the direction of Mr. C. Gray, and a large audience showed evident pleasure.

JOHANNESBURG.—The ninety-seventh meeting of the Johannesburg Musical Society was held at the Caledonian Hall on August 10. In an excellent miscellaneous programme, Madame Wedlake-Santanera contributed an important share as pianist and harpist.

KIMBERLEY.—Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' was performed in its entirety by the Diamond Fields Musical Society on August 24, under the direction of Mr. A. H. Ashworth, with a choir of over seventy and an orchestra of forty, both highly efficient. Complete justice was done to the work, and full advantage was taken of its opportunities for varied effects. The soloists were Madame L. Hooper-Rees, Mr. Harry Thurst and Mr. John Fellowes.

PRETORIA.—A farewell concert was given at the Town Hall on August 16 by Madame Wedlake-Santanera, who took part as pianist and harpist. She was assisted by Mrs. Altmann (violinist), Miss Bourke, and Mr. Percy Snowden (vocalists).

Answers to Correspondents.

AMATEUR GRAND OPERA.—Mr. Laurence Hatchwell (22, Whitworth Road, South Norwood, London, S.E.), of the Croydon Operatic Society, wishes to know of other amateur societies in the Kingdom formed for the purpose of producing grand opera in English. The Croydon Society has about one hundred members, and plays two or three operas every season.

HOFFNUNG.—Mozart's 'Masonic Funeral Music' is to be obtained from Messrs. Breitkopf & Härtel. Purcell's funeral music, as used at Westminster Abbey, was played from Sir Frederick Bridge's manuscript.

TENOR CLEF.—The doubled treble clef used for tenor music is an arbitrary indication that the music is really an octave lower than indicated.

H. E. MURDAY.—Your inquiry would involve a comparison of the specifications, which we regret we cannot undertake to make.

S. W.—Particulars of the Home Reading Musical Union are given elsewhere in our present issue.

THE MUSICAL EDUCATOR.

A LIBRARY OF INSTRUCTION IN MUSIC

WRITTEN BY EXPERTS.

FIRST PAYMENT, 1s. 6d.

The aim of "The Musical Educator" is to supply in compact and interesting form a complete and systematic musical education.

We would especially draw attention to the following names of Leaders in the Musical World, and of the subjects for which they are responsible. The practical value of these sections will be apparent to all students and professors of music and singing.

MARK HAMBOURG, "The Piano and how to Play it."

EDWIN H. LEMARE, "The Art of Organ Playing."

JOHN DUNN, "On Playing the Violin."

DR. F. H. COWEN, "The Art of Conducting."

Course of Voice Training, Singing, and Solfeccio. Course on the Pianoforte. Course on the Violin. Positions illustrated by Diagrams and Photographs. Course on Harmonium, American Organ, and on the Organ. Lessons on Scientific Basis of Music. Lessons on Rudiments of Music. Course on Harmony and Counterpoint. Lessons in Canon and Fugue. Lessons in Musical Forms, Musical Analysis and Composition. Dictionary of Musical Terms. Articles on the Instruments used in the Orchestras and in Military Bands. History of Music. Biographical Dictionary of Musicians. Articles on Children's Music and Musical Drill. Articles on Choir Training and Conducting. Article on Congregational Music. Article on Musical Degrees and Education. Article on Nationality in Music.

ITS VALUE TO THE TEACHER.

In "The Musical Educator" every section is dealt with by an expert. Its value to the teacher of music is obvious, because it shows the way—at once simple and lucid—in which some of the greatest of musical professors would set about the instruction of a pupil anxious to perfect himself in his particular department, whether it be that of the piano, the violin, the harp, or any other instrument, or of any department of singing.

Add to this its all-round value as a standard work of reference on every point concerning the wide domain of music and musicians, and it will be granted that "The Musical Educator" is unique as well as complete.

TWO OPINIONS.

Sir J. FREDERICK BRIDGE.

"The Musical Educator" is full of useful information plainly set forth. The musical illustrations are excellent."

Dr. CRESER, Mus.D. Oxon, F.R.C.O., F.T.C.L.

(Examiner in Music at Trinity College), writes:—"We have here an illuminative work of great value, not only to the student, but also to the general reader. . . . It contains excellent instructions."

MUSIC: ITS LAW AND EVOLUTION. By JULES COMBARIEU, Lecturer at the Collège de France. Authorised translation. Crown 8vo. 5s.

"The book is one of great power—the thinking, the argumentation and the historical knowledge all touching a far higher plane than one is used to in musical literature. M. Combarieu's breadth of view is nowhere more admirable than in some of his demonstrations of the connection between the music and the general life of an epoch."—Nation.

"The most important contribution of recent years to musical criticism. . . . This book is the work of a scholar and a thinker. The most profound learning has gone towards its writing, and every page is illuminated by clearness and brilliance of thought."

—Manchester Courier.

THE ABUSE OF THE SINGING AND SPEAKING VOICE, CAUSES, EFFECTS AND TREATMENT. By E. J. MOURE, Associate Professor to the Faculté de Médecine, Bordeaux, and A. BOWER, Fils, Ex-interne des Hôpitaux, Bordeaux, Physician to the Baths, Contrexéville. Translated by MACLEOD YEARSLEY, F.R.C.S., Senior Surgeon to the Royal Ear Hospital, Medical Inspector of London County Council Deaf Schools, &c. Illustrated. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d. net.

"The little book gives a thoroughly sound exposition from the scientific standpoint of its subject, the causes, effects, and treatment of vocal complaints being explained very learnedly, and yet with sufficient simplicity to be easily understood. . . . The authors prove themselves to have no mean knowledge of the arts of singing and speaking, and all those whose business it is to make a livelihood out of their voice may turn to the volume with the liveliest anticipation of not being disappointed."—Scotsman.

THE

A SACRED CANTATA

FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA

THE WORDS SELECTED FROM HOLY SCRIPTURE

AND THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

"No man knows better than Mr. Gaul how to write for voices. . . . 'Thou art the King of Glory,' a singularly fine chorus, worthy of any composer, living or dead. . . . Throughout the work we have spontaneousness, elegance, attractiveness, in short, a never-ending charm."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

"In every way worthy the great reputation and experience of its composer. . . . Is indeed a work of a very unusual character, and most probably destined to become more popular than any of his other compositions. . . . Worthy the study of choral societies of every grade."—North Staffordshire Sentinel.

"The Prince of Peace' is a work of an exceptionally high order. There are passages of surpassing beauty and brilliance. The work is varied and interesting, and, like all of Mr. Gaul's cantatas, supplies a need which no other composer of music so satisfactorily meets, viz., a moderately difficult work written on classical lines. . . . The cantata occupied about ninety minutes, and from the opening bars to the finish there was not a dull moment."—Pontypool Free Press.

"Admirably written for the voice, enhanced by charm of rhythm and picturesque accompaniments."—Birmingham Daily Mail.

JOAN OF ARC

AN HISTORICAL CANTATA

FOR THREE SOLO VOICES, CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA

MUSIC BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

"Few Cantatas are as rich in chaste melodies, charming choruses, and exquisite orchestration as Alfred R. Gaul's 'Joan of Arc,' performed for the first time in Plymouth by the Vocal Association in the Guildhall."—The Western News.

"Must enhance the high reputation of its composer."—Liverpool Courier.

"The inspiration of a highly-refined musician. . . . The Cantata is even a more masterly and beautiful work than 'The Holy City.'"—Huddersfield Examiner.

"No more charming Cantata than 'Joan of Arc' could have been chosen. It abounds in delicious music. There is not a tedious note in it."—Newcastle-on-Tyne Daily Chronicle.

"Gives the listener a vivid and realistic impression, its attractiveness being continuous instead of spasmodic."—Bradford Observer.

"The Exeter Oratorio Society last night achieved a brilliant success, and it may safely be said, without fear of exaggeration, that never before have they performed a work more satisfactory to themselves or more interesting to the audience than 'Joan of Arc.'"—Western Times.

"One of the most delightful Concerts ever given by the South Shields Choral Society was that of last evening, when the principal piece was 'Joan of Arc.' We cannot speak too highly of Mr. Gaul's work, which is of the most interesting description."—The Shields Daily News.

Price, paper cover, 2s. 6d.; paper boards, 3s.; scarlet cloth, 4s.

THE TIMES.

The only other work which requires special mention is Dr. Brewer's charming Suite of five Old English songs for chorus and orchestra; . . . all five are full of lightness and grace, delicate little pieces of vocal writing set off with piquant orchestration.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Dr. Brewer's Suite was brought to its first hearing, and mightily pleased the majority of the audience. . . . It is a breezy little composition, well laid out for not too ambitious choral societies, its music is always in perfectly good taste, now and then it is full of a genuine and very dainty grace, as in the pretty chorus for mixed voices, "Love is a sickness full of woes," and the delicious sixteenth century lullaby, "Golden slumbers kiss your eyes," which is written for female voices only, and always it is clean and wholesome, and unexacting in its demands upon the singers. Clearly, then, it justifies its existence. The Suite went very well under Dr. Brewer's guidance, the composer at the close being repeatedly recalled.

MORNING POST.

The numbers are singularly happy compositions, highly charged with old-world grace, but devised with a full knowledge of modern requirements, and their popularity is likely to be great, if their reception may be taken as any augury.

STANDARD.

The same fancy and imagination which characterise the composer's pastoral songs play round this delightful series of vignettes of Merrie England. The music, with its breezy lightness and delicate orchestral texture, suggests the playtime of Corydon and Phyllis amid the bowers of Arcady. Of the five numbers, the most striking are "Barley-Break," written in the style of the Elizabethan madrigalists, for male voices; and "Golden Slumbers," for female voices, a charming and seductive lullaby, daintily scored and very effective with its muted strings accompaniment and its melody and rhythmic sense. The last number, "Summer Sports," from which the Suite takes its name, is the most elaborate. The score graphically describes the hunt, and the bustle and excitement of the chase are cleverly suggested in the rush and life of the music. The whole work, which was finely performed and enthusiastically received, forms a little gallery of pastoral pictures of the old time, and admirably reflects the sentiment of the sixteenth century poets, the spirit of whose verses Dr. Brewer has so happily caught.

YORKSHIRE POST.

It is eminently tuneful, daintily orchestrated, and as thoroughly English as the words. The Suite was sung by the Gloucester contingent of the chorus with admirable spirit, and had a very pleasant and exhilarating effect. There is a distinct place for such music, which, without attempting to scale ambitious heights, is artistic and agreeable, and there is no doubt that "Summer Sports" will have a good vogue with choral societies, as indeed it well deserves.

BRISTOL TIMES.

The composition is the best of the kind Dr. Brewer has written. His music is always bright, melodious, straight-forward, clear in design, and captivating. In this example these features are forthcoming in their best degree, and the musical equipment of every poem hits off in the most apt and enchanting manner the sentiments. Directed by the author, the choir and band gave a fine illustration of the work. They grasped the spirit of the poems and music, entered with zest into their portrayal, and helped to make "Summer Sports" a triumphant success.

MANCHESTER COURIER.

Grace, refinement, and charm are the characteristics of "Summer Sports," and as the little work cannot unduly tax the powers of any moderately proficient choir, we prophesy for it an immediate and wide popularity.

The Church Times says: "Great care has been taken in selecting from among the works of well-known composers those which have stood the test of frequent use and are recognized of standard excellence, while the new compositions are of such merit as to warrant the belief that they will win a wide acceptance. We wish, for this admirable collection the cordial reception it certainly deserves."

The Birmingham Gazette says: "Should prove a boon and a blessing to the Church throughout the world. Surely there never was such a book in such a compass. There can be no doubt as to the brilliant future awaiting this most surprising book."

The Pall Mall Gazette says: "An excellent collection, convenient in form, clear in setting both of music and letterpress, contributed to by composers of justly merited fame. We are assured it will meet a real need, and consequently receive a hearty welcome alike from clergy, choirmasters, choirs and congregations."

FERRIS TOZER, MUS. DOCT., of Exeter, says: "A splendid collection, and specially for the price, it is wonderful. I shall recommend the book wherever I get an opportunity."

THE ARCHDEACON OF OTTAWA says: "I am very much pleased with 'Anthems Ancient and Modern,' and I shall be very happy to recommend it to others."

A CONSIDERATION OF THE CAPABILITIES OF THE VOCAL CORDS AND THEIR WORK IN THE ART OF TONE-PRODUCTION.

By ERNEST G. WHITE.

Musical News: "This is really a very remarkable book, for iconoclasm is writ all over its pages. Mr. White evinces the praiseworthy courage of his convictions. . . . The book is one which may be recommended for study, for it provides food for thought. The work is a thoughtful treatise . . . in it is to be found much sensible reasoning, and the author, if not to be entirely agreed with, is entitled to be treated with the utmost respect. Moreover, it is written . . . in an interesting style. The diagrams are excellent and explained with the greatest care."

Bristol Daily Mercury: "A new theory of voice production which will doubtless attract considerable attention, not only in musical circles, but amongst physical and medical scientists also. The book contains numerous diagrams of the most helpful character."

North London Illustrated: "An epoch-making book. The author's brilliant pages everywhere indicate he has dared to think for himself pretty boldly on the thorny subject of voice-production."

Blackheath Local Guide: "This book is a remarkable work. The author may certainly be congratulated upon the simple and lucid way in which he has handled an exceedingly complex and technical subject. In our judgment he has fully proved his various points."

Birmingham Daily Mail: "The work is quite revolutionary in its ideas. The theory is set out with much thoroughness. . . . One thing is highly admirable, and that is the courage of the author."

Daily Telegraph: "A small but pregnant book. . . . to which, short though it be, belong evidently many of the attributes of a musical bomb-shell." Kentish Mercury: "Mr. White is not only well equipped for his task by study and deep research, . . . but he will also compel the thoughtful reader's attention by his intelligent reasoning. The chapter on inhalation and enunciation is excellent."

The Warden (Irish Paper): "A startling new theory of how the voice is produced. The writer seems well fitted for discussing the subject, and puts forward his conclusions with persuasiveness and gives a variety of arguments in their favour that make the case well worth considering. The book is worthy of careful study and is full of instruction."

The Organist and Choirmaster: "The book demands serious consideration from all professors of the vocal art; not only because of its originality, but on account of the research and care given to the subject by the author, who has evidently devoted much time and enthusiasm to its compilation. We recommend the volume to every earnest student . . . as it contains information of undoubted value to every teacher and student of singing."

THE VEIL

POEM

BY

ROBERT BUCHANAN

SET TO MUSIC FOR SOLI, CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA

BY

FREDERIC H. COWEN.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS.

Paper Boards, 3s. 6d. ; Cloth, gilt, 5s. ; String Parts, 12s. 6d. ; Wind Parts and Full Score, MS.

THE TIMES.

It was quite clear that the work made a deep impression upon the audience; for the applause during its course and at the end was evidently the result of real appreciation, and not merely what was due to the popular conductor of the festival. The appreciation was well deserved; there are points of genuine beauty in every number, and the earnestness of the whole conception and the skill with which it has been carried out place the composer in a stronger light than anything which he has yet written.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

It is a genuine pleasure to record that the very large audience was filled with an enthusiasm that knew no bounds. Recall of the composer followed recall in the charming concert-room. . . . Dr. Cowen has risen to heights at least as lofty as those reached by the poet whose muse attracted him. . . . I would go further, and say that he has risen higher. . . . Dr. Cowen, true to himself, has surpassed himself, and many are the lovely passages in his most recent production.

STANDARD.

Dr. Cowen's festival novelty, "The Veil," which was heard for the first time, is the most ambitious and notable composition the composer has made to the literature of music. . . . Early in the first part we catch a glimpse of his felicity of expression in the tenor solo, "Now an Evangel," which in its sense of compassion makes an immediate appeal. . . . "Earth the mother," with its somewhat Elgareque influence and feeling, is one of the most eloquent sections. . . . The second part, "The Dream of the World without Death," is ushered in by some pregnant orchestral strains, and it is this section that went a long way to-night to establish the success of the work. The contralto solo, with its note of tender solicitude, mingled with passionate questionings, comes nearer to genuine inspiration than any other portion of the scena. . . . The duet between the Soul and the Body is probably the one that will go furthest in establishing the popularity of the work. . . . The work met with a great reception, and deservedly so, for it is, in depth of feeling, in width of design, and in imagination, the greatest and best thing that Dr. Cowen has given us.

MORNING LEADER.

Its sincerity was clear, and its success was undeniable. . . . It proved to be essentially modern in conception, and its qualities in this respect were heightened by the absence of any traces of foreign, as distinct from British influence. It belongs to the same school as the "Dream of Gerontius," and it can claim a high place among the recent output of choral work of a distinctively national type. The interest of the work occasionally rose to great heights. . . . The general idea of mankind intently seeking to penetrate the mysteries of the unknown was excellently conveyed, and a still better effect was obtained in those sections where intense and tragical expression was called for. Altogether it was clear that in this music the composer has made a notable addition to choral literature, and has shown himself ready to adopt the British style of abstract expression.

DAILY NEWS.

There are several happy imaginative touches. . . . Among these the most noticeable was the contralto's song, in which a mother bewails the loss of her children, which is a beautiful and impressive composition. Again, Dr. Cowen has been inspired in the song of the Watcher at the deathbed. It is for baritone, and has real poignancy and beauty. One could continue to point out this and that beauty in the work, but the mere mention of solos will convey nothing to the reader who has not heard and does not know "The Veil." It must be enough to say that Dr. Cowen has written a work which contains many surprising beauties, and that, if it falls short of being a masterpiece, it is certainly a most interesting contribution to native art.

MORNING POST.

The success with which he presents his thoughts is a tribute to his intellectual powers, and helps to make the work a remarkable production. . . . There is a highly successful effort in the creation of atmosphere at the commencement of the "Dream of the World without Death," with the scene of the Watcher, and the orchestral colouring is excellent. . . . The sequential description by the Mother of the loss of her two children possesses great pathos, and the chorus that concludes this section has a breadth and an originality that might well have been maintained. . . . The duet [between the Soul and the Body] has a lyrical character that fully represents Dr. Cowen's powers of writing graceful and pleasing music. . . . The best effect is secured at its close, in which the Chorus have a share, and here the construction and colouring are masterly in their grace and tenderness. The Song of the Seeker does not in itself indicate that the special manner has been maintained, and the impression made was by means of the choral accompaniment, and with so much conviction that the audience burst into spontaneous applause when it reached a point of apparent termination. . . . The Vision of the Divine Presence is described in hushed, spoken sentences, and the work comes to a calm end with the awakening of the Seeker and the close of the vision.

YORKSHIRE POST.

"The Veil" strikes one first of all as a remarkably able and thoughtful treatment of a noble and inspiring theme, and it shows not merely the power to provide fitting music for the text, but a sense of proportion and of the value of contrast that is of the greatest possible service in enhancing and holding the hearer's attention. The weird chromatic progressions by which it is sought to express the mystical atmosphere of a great portion of the poem are relieved by the tender mood of the section entitled "Earth the mother," and again by the simple and appealing pathos of the episode in which the mother is bereft of her children. This had the advantage of being sung by Madame Kirkby Lunn, whose consummate art has never been more strikingly displayed, for she obtained an effect of the deepest emotion without the least suspicion of exaggeration, but with a reticence which enhanced the sincerity of the performance not easily forgotten by those who heard it. But only her rightful share must be allowed the executant for a result which she could not have produced had not the same sincerity been discoverable in the music, which, to my mind, places Dr. Cowen on a still higher plane than he has ever occupied hitherto. Another very beautiful scene is the duet for soprano and tenor, a love scene of an exalted type, breathing an emotion which is not merely sensuous, yet has a note of passion mingled with its strains. A happy idea is where the lifting of the Veil is told by the contraltos and basses with the spoken voice, the effect of which at the central point of a great musical work is most striking.

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.

His music is essentially vivid. Much use is made of leading themes, and that which is associated with the idea of the Veil is especially striking. . . . The dream scene, in which the mother bewails, not the death, but the sudden disappearance of her children, is astonishingly powerful, and with the part of the mother filled by Madame Kirkby Lunn, it provided the point of supreme interest in the whole cantata. . . . The most cumulative effect occurs towards the end of the work. It is very massive and imposing. . . . The work was greeted with well-judged enthusiasm, and Dr. Cowen was called upon several times to acknowledge the applause.

BIRMINGHAM DAILY POST.

When all deductions have been made there remains a quantity of very impressive and touching music, and music with a good deal of genuine humanity in it. It was received with great enthusiasm.

ARRANGEMENT FOR PIANOFORTE SOLO BY THE COMPOSER.

Price Two Shillings net.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

TO CONDUCTORS OF MEDIUM AND SMALL ORCHESTRAS.

The following pieces by ALBERT E. MATT are so scored that they may be played:

- (1) By Strings and one of each Wind.
- (2) By Piano Solo and Strings.
- (3) By full Orchestra.

SUNSET. INTERMEZZO:—

Full Orch., 2s.; Small Orch., 1s. 4d.; Extra Parts, 3d.; Piano Solo, 2s.

DAWN. IDVLL:—

Full Orch., 2s.; Small Orch., 1s. 4d.; Extra Parts, 3d.; Piano Solo, 2s.

RURAL SCENES. THREE MOVEMENTS:—

Full Orch., 6s.; Small Orch., 4s. 6d.; Extra Parts, 8d.; Piano Solo, 2s.

Daily Telegraph: "Mr. Matt may be congratulated on the success of his graceful and musically work."

NORWEGIAN SCENES. THREE MOVEMENTS:—

Full Orch., 6s.; Small Orch., 4s. 6d.; Extra Parts, 8d.; Piano Solo, 2s.

Musical News: "The first performance of A. E. Matt's Norwegian Scenes was looked forward to with interest, nor was expectation disappointed. It is a picturesque production, a distant merry-making (allotted to the muted Strings) and a Scherzo illustrating a sleigh ride being specially telling."

ANGELUS AND CARNIVAL. TWO PIECES:—

Full Orch., 4s.; Small Orch., 3s.; Extra Parts, 6d.; Piano Solo, 2s.

Eastbourne Gazette: "Mr. A. E. Matt's 'Angelus and Carnival' gained an enthusiastic reception, the latter piece being repeated in response to prolonged applause."

GRAND MARCH. "FAME AND GLORY":—

Full Orch., 3s. 4d.; Small Orch., 2s. 8d.; Extra Parts, 4d.; Piano Solo, 2s.

Eastbourne Gazette: "This delightful March is so majestic and melodious and well worked out, that we believe it will, ere long, be played on every orchestra in the Kingdom and in thousands of drawing-rooms."

ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS

ARRANGED IN FIVE GRADES

BY

JOSEPH R. TOBIN,

Mus. Bac. Dunselm.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

Whilst primarily intended for the use of candidates preparing for the diplomas of the Royal College of Organists, these Bases may also prove useful to harmony students in general. A blank staff has been provided with each exercise; this not only eases the eye, and so facilitates the reading of the bases, but it also enables the student to work the exercises away from the keyboard.

AUGUSTA MARY WAKEFIELD,

Born near Kendal, August 19, 1853.

Died at Grange-over-Sands, September 16, 1910.

We deeply regret to have to record the death of Miss Wakefield, which occurred at Grange-over-Sands in the midst of the folk she loved so well, and for whom she worked so clear-sightedly. For a year or more Miss Wakefield had suffered illness. Until near the end there was always hope, which she shared, that she might recover and once again inspire the lives of those who were brought under her irresistible and radiating influence.

Mary Wakefield, to use the form of name by which she was best known, was the greatest force in the musical competition festival movement in this country. She did not invent choral competitions, but by her untiring self-sacrifice and convincing apostleship she made them a national cause, a national asset. She attained her dominating position by the great strength of her uncompromising character, the clearness of her vision, and the lucid downrightness of her speech.

It was in 1885 that she first planned an insignificant musical competition amongst the villagers on her father's estate at Sedgwick, near Kendal, where she was born, and from this beginning she was impelled, not merely to increase the local scope of the scheme, but to stir up other parts of the country. The result of this resolute propaganda is well known. The movement now extends its influence from Aberdeen to Truro, or, as Miss Wakefield liked to put it, from John o' Groat's House to Land's End. The festival established at Kendal (the Westmorland festival) fulfils the ideals which always animated the advocacy of its originator. In the early days of the event, Mary Wakefield conducted the combined music. In 1900, after fifteen years' service, she retired from this section of the work and was the recipient of a testimonial from her innumerable friends and coadjutors. In this connection an appreciation of Miss Wakefield's work, which the present writer contributed to the Musical Times of August, 1900, may be quoted:

'The growth of the Westmorland festival has been phenomenal. What was at first a small local competition, that concerned merely a few score of villagers, has expanded to an undertaking interesting the whole country side and drawing into its attractive fold scores of choirs of all kinds, village orchestras, and other musical organizations, most of which were brought into being by the festival scheme. A district reputed to be unmusical has, in this way, gained an almost national reputation for its enthusiasm for musical study and ability in execution. That this proud achievement is mainly owing to the faith, inspiration, and musical skill of Miss Wakefield, her numerous and influential local coadjutors would be the first to claim.

'The Westmorland festival is not merely a scheme of competitions. The competitive side is subordinate and is meant to minister to the end. No one knows better than Miss Wakefield that competitions may have a seamy side. At Kendal the prizes offered consist, with one exception only, of medals, certificates, and banners. The exception is a prize of £5, which is offered to the village most successful in several sections, junior and senior. The money incentive is, therefore, practically non-existent. The end is to develop faculty by systematic study, to establish ideals of good execution, and to provide object lessons as to how such ideals may be realised; and, further, to give as wide an acquaintance as possible with the literature of music. New music is studied every year. Adjudicators are asked to give full reasons for their decisions, and to point out the path of improvement where necessary. The eagerness to know what to do and how to do it manifested at these yearly gatherings is one of their most exhilarating features. Then the combined performance of some large works is looked upon as an absolutely essential part of the scheme. The competition of the small sections equips chorals for this supreme effort. The educative effect of this constant striving to acquire knowledge and skill was strikingly exemplified this year in the rapt attention with which the 600 chorals comprising the adult festival choir, and the immense audience followed admirable performances of the C minor Symphony and the "Scotch" Symphony given by the Manchester band under Signor Risegari. The importance attached to the combined performance may be measured by the extraordinary efforts put forth to secure adequate rehearsal. At first the difficulties seemed insuperable, but Miss Wakefield was not to be foiled. She and her sister (now Mrs. Argles) would, during the winter months, on nearly every night of the week, drive round in all weathers to some remote village to toilsomely teach by note or by ear a Bach motet, a Mendelssohn chorus, or a modern cantata. To be drilled and talked at by Miss Wakefield was the sensation of the week to many a humble villager, who would tramp miles in slush to enjoy the stimulus.

'All Miss Wakefield's enthusiasm and practical insight would have been in vain if they had not been supplemented by her musical ability, both natural and acquired. Had she have chosen to have entered the musical profession, she would have taken high rank as a singer. Gifted with a fine full mezzo-soprano voice, which she could mould to express strong dramatic feeling, she was fortunate in being able to avail herself of the tuition of Randegger, Henschel, Blumenthal, Grieg, and Sir Herbert Oakley, in gaining a general musical education. To Signor Randegger's teaching, Miss Wakefield ascribes the fact that her voice, often subjected to great strain at innumerable rehearsals, has lasted so well.

'In the literary field, Miss Wakefield's pen has been constantly active. She has contributed many articles on musical subjects to well-known magazines, but her most notable essay is the handsome and useful book, "Ruskin on Music," in which all that the great writer said on music is culled for the benefit or obfuscation of the general reader. Her beautiful home, Nutwood, at Grange-over-Sands, overlooking Morecambe Bay, is full of mementoes of her acquaintance and friendship with well-known people. She often sang to Ruskin at Brantwood, where she was a welcome guest. His acknowledgment of the service in the dedication in "Sesame and Lilies" is worth quotation. It is as follows: "Mary Wakefield, to whose bright and gifted nature—good—in the kindest sense, the author is thankful for some of the happiest hours of his old age." In a fine edition of his poems, Matthew Arnold wrote: "Mary Wakefield, with affectionate admiration and regard." To both these tributes thousands of people, young and old, could sincerely subscribe.'

The funeral took place at Crosscraze Churchyard, on September 19, in the presence of a large gathering of people. Many floral tributes were sent, and there were touching indications of deep respect and affection for the deceased.

Will the competition festival movement suffer by the removal of its chief inspiring personality? Surely it should not be allowed to do so. The movement exists and grows because of its proved utility. If its promoters resolve to keep pure the ideals that stimulated its founder, it should still prosper and fulfil its great mission. There are possible fatal drifts if competition is permitted to become a master instead of being controlled as a servant. But with so many high-purposed advocates to watch and guide its future, the movement should be secure. W. G. McN.

NEW BRIGHTON (LIVERPOOL).

September 10.

This competition has developed into one of the most important events of its class in the north-west of England. Experienced management, and knowledge of how to rub people the right way, has been perhaps the greatest factor in the progress of the festival. For this the credit is due to Mr. Llew. Wynne, the secretary, who contrives to control all the machinery without intruding a creak—it seems to go automatically.

The scheme this year included twelve musical sections and two for recitations. We have only space to record results of the chief classes.

Three children's choirs sang Elgar's well-known trio 'The Swan' (a formidable piece for young children to tackle), and 'Spring song,' a pretty two-part song by Myles B. Foster. The singing was very good in every case, and the result was as follows:

Cloughton Juvenile Choir, 140 (Mr. Tom Lloyd).

Hanley Grove Council School Choir, 131

(Mr. E. J. Bridgewater).

Rhos (Bethlehem) Juvenile Prize Choir, 123

(Mr. Jacob Edwards).

There were no fewer than eleven entries in the male-voice choir class and the singing was in several instances remarkably fine. Every one of the choirs that had entered, competed. The test-pieces were (a) that male-voice choir classic, Sullivan's 'The long day closes,' and as a gay and dainty contrast (b) Mr. Lee Williams's clever and mischievous 'To Celia.' The following is a list of the choirs in the programme order:

Fynnon Groew, 127 (Mr. J. Spencer).

Hindley Industrial Co-operative Society, 126

(Mr. J. Layland).

Huddersfield Glee and Madrigal Society, 128

(Mr. J. W. Armitage).

Liverpool Cecelia, 102 (Mr. J. S. O'Reilly).

1st. Manchester Orpheus Glee Society, 152

(Mr. W. S. Nesbitt).

2nd. Nelson Arion Glee Union, 148 (Mr. Lawson Berry).

St. Helen's Glee Club, 130 (Dr. S. B. Siddall).

Todmorden, 137 (Mr. Harold Lees).

Wigan Harmonic, 130 (Mr. A. Bullock).

Warrington Apollo, 134 (Mr. Harry Berrey).

3rd. York, 140 (Mr. H. Seymour Wilkinson).

There was not much to choose between Manchester and Nelson. Mr. Lawson Berry has brought Nelson up to a very high standard. This fine choir, while providing a splendid example of skilful training, incidentally forces Manchester to maintain the highest possible standard. As will be seen from the marks given above, the York Choir is also well-equipped and led. It was courageous of them to travel from so far, and perhaps fatigue may have had some effect on their singing.

The mixed-voice choir class attracted seven choirs, one coming from Hanley and another from Nottingham. The tests were that wonderfully beautiful part-song—one of the earliest and best of the series of part-songs by which Elgar has enriched this form—"My love dwelt in a northern land" (unaccompanied), and the chorus of Handel, 'May no rash intruder.'

The order of singing and the marks attained (80 for each piece was the maximum) were as follows:

		(a)	(b)	Tl.
	Oldham Harmonic ...	60	62	122
	(Mr. H. Hannam.)
2nd.	Huddersfield Glee and Madrigal ...	69	72	141
	(Mr. J. W. Armitage.)
3rd.	Nottingham ...	72	67	139
	(Mr. William Woolley.)
1st.	Colne Valley ...	74	71	145
	(Dr. T. E. Pearson.)
	Stretford Glee and Madrigal ...	62	66	128
	(Mr. T. Corlett.)
	Hanley and District ...	63	67	130
	(Mr. E. C. Redfern.)
	Ashton-in-Makerfield ...	64	67	131
	(Mr. John Davies.)

We regret that owing to great pressure on our space this month we cannot give the detailed criticism which the importance of this competition deserves. It must suffice to say that the Colne Valley Choir sang the Elgar part-song with beautiful tone and touching expression. Mr. Woolley's Choir was also as successful with this piece in the matter of expression, but there was a slight feeling of conscious restraint in the execution.

The tests in the solo-singing sections were as follows: Soprano, 'Lo, the heaven-descended prophet' (Graun); contralto, 'A summer night' (Goring Thomas); tenor, 'Take a pair of sparkling eyes' (Sullivan); baritone, 'To Anthea' (Hatton). The mixed-voice quartets sang Hubert Parry's 'If I had but two little wings,' and the male-voice quartets an arrangement by Mr. Harry Evans of 'Ar byd y nos' ('All through the night'). The adjudicators were Dr. McNaught, Mr. Harry Evans, and Mr. John Williams (Carnarvon). The official accompanists were Madame Maggie Evans and Miss Millicent Richards. There were large audiences.

BLACKPOOL.

October 18 to 22.

The entries for this great festival are now completed. In the solo sections the entries are not so numerous as those that almost overwhelmed adjudicators last year, but the choral classes are as usual supported by many of the best small choirs in the country. Nowhere can the results of the competitive movement be better studied than at this festival. Mr. L. H. Franceys (Festival Offices) is the secretary.

THE ROYAL NATIONAL EISTEDDFOD.

COLWYN BAY, September 13 to 16.

The National Eisteddfod has again justified its existence from the musical standpoint. This may be asserted although the entries, or at least the number of the competitors, was not large, and the standard generally was not particularly high. The arena, a large and substantial pavilion specially constructed for the occasion, was admirably designed, and it turned out to be good acoustically. It held about 7,000 persons. The attendance was satisfactory, the auditorium being sometimes quite full. There was never any inconvenient overcrowding, even to hear Mr. Lloyd George deliver his speech in Welsh.

The choral test-pieces were unusually searching. In every important class there was one piece by a Welsh composer. This was quite as it should be at a national gathering intended to encourage creatively as well as executive skill. The Welsh pieces were generally simple and sometimes not very good specimens of the composing powers of the race. The other pieces were, in one or two instances, not well chosen in view of the known limitations of possible competitors. Fancy asking the second choral mixed-voice class to sing Elgar's 'Deep in my soul,' a virtuosic piece of extreme tonal difficulty! The choice of 'O! wild west wind' for the chief choral was more justifiable, because it was possible for first-rate choirs. The judges were Dr. Coward, Dr. Roland Rogers, Mr. David Jenkins, Mus. Bac., and Mr. David Evans, Mus. Bac.—all excellent musicians and experienced adjudicators.

Some of the features of the event were as follows:

1. The judges, although sitting together, worked independently. Each judge allowed 40 marks for each piece as a maximum, and no heads were planned.

2. When choirs or other competitors had two or more tests to perform they were allowed to sing them in any order. [Personally, I think this is wrong, because the varied succession of keys and the contrasts of general effect of pieces of widely different character to some extent place the competitors on terms of inequality. In the male-voice choir class one of the judges remarked that Manchester was wise to sing the 'Battle of the Baltic' last. This choir won, but not necessarily owing to this particular exercise of wisdom.]

3. Prizes were offered for the best marshalling of choirs. This was an admirable device to stimulate the well-known masterly inactivity which is only too common at Eisteddfodau, and which exhausts the patience of audiences and adjudicators, and upsets a time-table already a fiction of the programme.

4. Small events were as usual allowed to take place in the immense hall. Thousands could on these occasions hear nothing, and were naturally impatient. No doubt in the case of fine adult solo-singing the huge audience like to exercise judgment by comparing several competitors in each class, but with children playing the violin or the pianoforte no such comparison is possible. It would be enough to satisfy sentiment to allow only the previously ascertained winner to perform.

5. This was a great national event which drew an audience from all parts of Wales, and which included many visitors from distant parts. At the concerts some large works by Welsh composers were included in the programme. These works demanded an orchestra. For their presentation in the immense hall the orchestra engaged was: 1st violins, 6; 2nd violins, 4; violas, 3; violoncellos, 3; double-basses, 2; wood-wind, 8; brass, 9; and timpani, total, 36. The Eisteddfod Choir (an excellent body of singers, admirably trained by Mr. John Williams, of Carnarvon) consisted of: Sopranos, 92; altos, 60; tenors, 45; and basses, 68; total, 265. The band of course should have been at least twice as strong to fill the hall and balance the choir.

6. The first-prizes in the two chief choral events went to English choirs. This is not a pleasant result for Welsh patriots. One cannot but admire the courage shown by the Welsh in allowing the competition to be open after many defeats. They no doubt realise that they are fairly beaten, and that the nobler course is not to exclude their rivals, but to endeavour to improve upon their results. Only by this means can progress be expected. As it turned out in the present instance, Welsh choirs were not much behind the winning choirs.

There were only three entries in the chief choral class—two English and one Welsh—and only four in the second choral. In the female-voice choir class there were five entries, in the children's choir class eleven (out of which nine sang), and in the male-voice choir class four.

Other statistics of entries and actual competitions are as follows:

	Entries.	Sang.
Soprano solo	52	30
Contralto solo	50	30
Baritone	54	21
Quartet (S.A.T.B.)	19	3
Duets (S.A.)	27	7

Other statistics were not available.

CHIEF CHORAL CLASS.

(Open to all comers. Number of voices, 150 to 175.)

Tests: (a) Requiem and Kyrie from the 'Requiem Mass' (Mozart); (b) 'Trip we gaily' from 'Dewi Sant' (St. David) (Jenkins); (c) 'O! wild west wind' (Elgar).

Order of performance.

Rhymney Gwent Choral Society (Mr. Daniel Owen).

North Staffordshire District Choral Society

(Mr. H. Whittaker).

Southport Choir (Mr. W. Tattersall).

The three test-pieces presented due variety. (a) These two choruses have a solemn, measured, and majestic tread, and demand the most skilful treatment of legato and sostenuto and clear vocalisation. (c) This is one of Elgar's most significant part-songs; it adopts a free form, fitted for the expression of the turbulence and intensity of the words. It is very difficult musically and physically—a passage near the end in D major, preceded and followed by E flat major, is a specially troublesome one—but when finely performed its effect is thrilling. (b) This piece calls for some daintiness of rhythmic treatment. It presents no difficulties, musical or temperamental.

Rhymney sang first. It was obviously a well-equipped choir. In (a) the tone was not very attractive, and the intonation was not true. There was a tendency to lightness—almost staccato—instead of an imposing sostenuto. Hence the mood was missed. A fine climax was realised on page 7. In the 'Christie' the vocalization was better. The balance was top-heavy throughout, the basses not having sufficient resonance. In (b) the singing was excellent. The pace was brisk, there were vivid contrasts, and many evidences of fine drill and a general freedom and alacrity. The singers seemed to breathe freely on their native heath. (c) Here the musical difficulties were too great. Mistakes were made, and some of the finest points of the part-song were missed. But there was much to admire in the spirit, and one might almost say the audacity of the performance. The modulation to D major was not correct. A striking but not a first-rate performance.

North Staffordshire sang second. There was much excited expectancy in the audience. The choir had achieved a great reputation by winning first-prizes at Eisteddfodau, under its late conductor, Mr. Whewall. Would they do as well under their new conductor, Mr. Herbert Whittaker, of Blackpool fame? They began with (a). The tone at once captivated the ear, but there was just a suspicion of failing intonation. A very exact regular tread was a feature of the rhythm, but yet one yearned for a firmer welded sostenuto. Bases were grand—solid and secure in attack. Sopranos had a brilliant ring of resonance. Altos and tenors were not so good as the other parts. A magnificent climax, not too steep in its ascent, was secured at p. 7. In the 'Christe,' the basses again achieved distinction, but the general execution was not so fluent as in the opening section. (b) There was much to admire in the elasticity of the rhythm. The sopranos sang brilliantly and the tone all round was blendful, yet on the whole the general effect did not rouse enthusiasm.

MR. HERBERT WHITTAKER.

(Photograph by Warwick Brookes, Manchester.)

The expression was too much of the formal kind. In (c) one could see as well as hear that the choir and conductor looked to this piece to gain laurels. The opening was arresting if it did not appear stormy enough. Again and again the broad and the subtle touches of the composer were duly realised. The execution and the mood at 'Drive my dead thoughts o'er the universe, the trumpet of a prophecy' (a passage where it is easy to overstep the sublime) was magnificent. The caressing tenderness of the few bars succeeding this passage was quite beautiful. The tenors did not make much of their delicate melody on page 37, and elsewhere they did not shine. The last seven bars were exciting, dramatic, and well controlled, although the singing in the difficult modulation was not quite true. A fine performance that held one's whole attention from start to finish.

Southport came last. Mr. Tattersall had the honour of winning a first prize in the second choral class at the London Eisteddfod in 1909, and so much was expected from him and his fine choir. They sang (a) first. At once we felt in the grip of a masterly interpretation. Here at last was the solemn, massive sostenuto, suffused here and there with some emotion. The semiquaver runs were perfectly even and tranquil. There was always a rich, sympathetic tone, and the staying power of the choir was shown in the fine climax at the end of the 'Christe.' The Elgar part-song (c) was sung next. It began well because it secured the impatience and impetuosity of the mood. Then some unsteadiness was noticeable, some lack of control. The pace was often very fast, but this would not have mattered if there had been complete unity of rhythmic attack. A soprano member came in too soon on a high A—but this was a negligible mistake—it was merely evidence that there was excitement in the choir. The end page was strenuously sung, but it did not move as expression. The chorus (b) had a clear performance, the tone-quality being very musical and blendful. There was a ragged attack, and on the whole not much life.

What would the judges, all now anxiously conferring, decide? They had to balance the fact that Rhymney was best in the Welsh piece; North Staffordshire best in the Elgar part-song, and Southport unquestionably best in the Mozart choruses. The result was declared by Dr. Coward. North Staffordshire was placed first, Rhymney second, and therefore Southport was third. Congratulations poured upon Mr. Whittaker. No doubt this result was a deep gratification to him, inasmuch as he, the new conductor, had maintained the reputation of the choir.

Space will not admit of a detailed criticism of the other choral competitions. The bare results must alone be given:

SECOND CHOIR COMPETITION.

(Open to all comers. Number of voices, 60 to 80.)

Tests: (a) 'Gweddi Gwraig y Meddwyn' ('The Prayer') (Dr. Joseph Parry); (b) 'Deep in my soul' (Elgar), unaccompanied.

Order of Performance.

Crewe Glee and Madrigal Society (Mr. E. Lowe).

Bangor Choral Society (Mr. R. Davies).

Trecynon United Choir (Mr. W. Gwynne).

Cefn Mawr Choral Society (Mr. G. W. Hughes).

All the choirs found 'Deep in my soul' difficult to sing in tune. Cefn Mawr won the first place and Trecynon the second.

In the male-voice class, which customarily draws a large number of entries, only four choirs sang. On the whole the pieces selected did not make a good batch of tests. 'Sorrow's tears' is an intricate and extremely difficult piece, not suited for performance at a competition. Only the Manchester Choir succeeded in giving it accurately.

MALE CHOIRS.

(Open to all comers. Number of voices, 60 to 80.)

Tests: (a) 'Brwydr y Baltic' ('The Battle of the Baltic') (T. Osborne Roberts); (b) 'Sorrow's tears' (Cornelius); (c) 'The rider's song' (Cornelius); (b) and (c) unaccompanied.

Garw Male-Voice Society (Mr. John Butler).

Manchester Orpheus Glee Society (Mr. W. S. Nesbitt).

Swansea and District Male-Voice Society

(Mr. Ll. R. Bowen).

Warrington Male-Voice Choir (Mr. S. Hassall).

Manchester came first and Swansea second.

There was excellent singing in the female-voice choir section. The tests and entries were as follows:

FEMALE CHOIRS.

(Open to all comers. Number of voices, 35 to 45.)

Tests: (a) 'Come, sisters, come' (Mackenzie); (b) 'Y Môr Forwynion' ('Sea Maidens') (D. D. Parry).

Carmarthen (Miss A. M. Buckley).

Armonica, Coedpoeth (Mr. T. Carrington).

Dowlais (Mr. W. Hughes).

Côr Merched yr Iwerddon, Dublin (Madame Cosslett-Bangor (Mr. Thomas Thomas). Heller).

Holyhead Harmonic (Mr. W. S. Owen).

Carmarthen came first and Bangor second.

The evening concerts drew immense audiences. The Eisteddfod choir, trained by Mr. J. Williams, performed each night with success. The works performed included Dr. Joseph Parry's 'Saul of Tarsus,' Mr. David Jenkins' 'Psalm of life, German's Welsh Rhapsody and 'The Messiah.' Llifa and Llew. Tegid were as usual genial and business-like conductors (i.e., managers) of the Eisteddfod gatherings, and Mr. Llew. Wynne was an able stage-manager.

The result of the competition for Children's Choirs is given in the School Music Review. W. G. McN.

WILLIAM BOYCE,

By H. C. COLLES.

Among the crowd of musical centenaries which have been celebrated this year it is not surprising that the bicentenary of the birth of William Boyce should have attracted little attention. To the majority of people he is remembered only as the editor of the collection of 'Cathedral Music' and the writer of some worthy anthems and services which no one is very anxious to hear. Anyone, however, who has sufficient curiosity to read the list of his compositions in any musical dictionary, or better still to turn to the exhaustive record of his life and work which Mr. F. G. Edwards published in the Musical Times (July, 1901), may easily come to the conclusion that Boyce is a shamefully neglected composer. Yet both these estimates are untrue.

If we would get at the core of the work of any English composer from the Restoration onward practically to our own day, we have to allow much for the constant inducements they have suffered from both to overwrite and to fritter away artistic energy upon purely occasional work. Boyce was very much surrounded by these influences. The mention in Grove's Dictionary of 'eight symphonies,' composed by him at a time when the production of any genuine symphonic work in England would have been of immense importance, is misleading, since we find on inquiry that they were put together from the overtures to various royal odes which it was his duty to turn out from time to time as Master of His Majesty's Band. Besides various obligations which appointments of this kind imposed upon him, he was affected by another less tangible imposition, which is generally called 'the Handel influence.' The term is unfair to Handel, for the direct impress of a commanding genius such as his upon lesser contemporaries must always be inspiring; but this influence was indirect, since it came through the public taste and not straight from the composer himself. When Handel's work at last became popular its superficial qualities of mere bigness of design took possession of the public ear, and other composers were pressed to adopt the same means of expression, even when they had no equally big ideas to offer. Burney was perfectly right when he asserted that Boyce was 'one of the few of our church composers who neither pillaged nor servilely imitated' Handel, but one cannot read Boyce's larger compositions without seeing that he was so far impressed as often to fill out his work into a larger plan than that which was demanded by the thing he wished to express. No more flagrant example of this swollen attitude towards music is to be found than Boyce's edition of Purcell's Te Deum which he consented to make for the Festival of the Sons of the Clergy, in accordance with the taste of the time. A comparison of Purcell's original with Boyce's arrangement (both are published in an accessible form by Messrs. Novello & Co.) shows at once how Boyce expanded Purcell's terse musical utterance in order to give it a false grandiloquence. And what he did once consciously with another man's work he frequently did unconsciously with his own.

A third condition must be taken into account before we can form a real estimate of Boyce's innate capacity as a composer. The three volumes of 'Cathedral Music' which he edited show him as a fine musical scholar, and his larger church works show that he had absorbed the styles of earlier composers without always quite assimilating them into his own. It is a danger which often besets the creative artist who concerns himself very closely with the work of other men. For example, beautiful as is the feeling of Boyce's Burial Service in E minor, one cannot listen to its delicate transitions from one common chord to another without feeling that it has been suggested by the similar service of Thomas Morley, and again in some of the verse anthems the histrionic style of Blow makes its appearance. The bass solo beginning the anthem 'The Lord is King,' the daring intervals of its declamation, and the attempt to make the waves of the sea rage horribly by means of rushing semi-quaver passages on the organ, is the reproduction of a style with which Boyce normally had little sympathy.

We get most readily to the man himself if for a moment we close the bulky volumes of church music and open instead his 'Lyra Britannica,' described as 'a collection of songs, duets and cantatas on various subjects.' Variety of subject is indeed their least salient feature. The third-rate pastoral love-poetry with its pretended simplicity which is the bane of every sophisticated age, is much too prevalent, and is quite sufficient to account for the fact that most of the songs are now forgotten. There are, however, other things besides the love affairs of Chloe and Damon; a few drinking and hunting songs which have a hearty 'devil-may-care' ring about them, and an occasional country song of quite frank sentiment. But though the poetry is all at best second rate, that only throws into stronger relief the fact that Boyce had a remarkable facility for writing fresh melodies, both apt to the feeling of the words and fitting their metre like a glove. There is nothing forced, and never a trace of the Italian aria, even when the songs belonged to stage works such as Dryden's 'Secular Masque.' A single example cannot of course show how versatile was the composer's melody, but it is worth while to give one: the words are particularly artless, and yet the whole song has a certain sparkling vitality from the way in which the composer has exactly caught their rhythm and set it to an unflagging tune :

Let rakes for plea - sure range the Town, And mi - sers gloat on gold - en . . guin-eas; Let plen - ty smile . . or for - tune frown, The sweets of . . love are mine and Jen-ny's,

mine and Jen-ny's, mine and Jen-ny's, the sweets of . . . love are mine . . and Jen-ny's.

'She' then sings a verse to the same effect and the song ends with the duet :

To - ge - ther let us sport and play, And live in . . plea - sures where no . . sin is; The priest shall tie . . the knot to - day, And

wed - lock's bands make John - ny Jen-ny's,
And wed - lock's bands make John - ny

John - ny Jen-ny's, John - ny Jen-ny's, and Jen-ny's, John - ny Jen-ny's, Jen-ny's, and

wed - lock's bands make John - ny Jenny's.
wed - lock's bands make John - ny Jenny's.

These things show a very different side of Boyce from the cultured scholar of cathedral music. But the two sides, the man of frank and simple expression and the master of counterpoint and form, sometimes appear side by side. If it were ever in doubt, as it well might be, whether the William Boyce of 'Johnny and Jenny' and he of the massive double chorus 'O give thanks' were the same person, it could be proved by producing the serenata 'Solomon.'

A pompous overture after the manner of Lully and Handel is followed by an introductory chorus in praise of the King of Israel, all of which clearly suggests the oratorio style. But when we turn the page we find ourselves launched upon a pastoral dialogue founded upon passages from the 'Song of Solomon' and as wholly secular in treatment as 'The shepherd's lottery,' 'The chaplet,' or any of the other musical entertainments which he furnished. In the article already referred to, Mr. Edwards called attention to the solo 'Softly rise, thou southern breeze,' but the opening dialogue of the second part, 'The cheerful spring begins to-day' and the light-hearted duet which follows it, 'Together let us range the fields,' are even more characteristic of Boyce in his happy irresponsible vein. The extract given below includes some of its most telling features, but it is not possible to show here how the first words set to the same lilting melody recur and knit the piece together into a free rondo form. The little touches of instrumental word-painting to describe the coming of spring, such as the contrast between 'bleak winter' (the very thought of which makes the singer's teeth chatter) and the 'warbling birds,' seem to fall into place quite naturally and make up a genuine piece of pictorial writing which leads exceedingly well to the more lyrical duet:

Even a cursory glance at Boyce's secular music, for which he adopted no fixed and ready-made standards, sends us back to his church music better able to judge what part of it represents spontaneous feeling and what is the result of cunning workmanship. The settings of canticles for church services do not demand much attention, but it is worth while to notice in passing that the Te Deum in A, which would be named at once by most organists as representative of Boyce, is quite one of the most colourless things of the kind which he wrote. There is another and larger Te Deum in the same key, which has far more interest both in its actual ideas and in the varied use made of them, and the same may be said of the service in G.

When we come to the numerous anthems, a fairly direct line may be drawn between the jubilant ones, 'O praise the Lord,' 'O be joyful,' and the like, and those which express some less exalted phase of human feeling. Only the very greatest composers can sustain the level of pure religious ecstasy, which words of the former class require, and in his attempts to reach it Boyce often falls back upon the mannerisms of his contemporaries and predecessors. That jerky trochaic rhythm of which Purcell was so unaccountably fond crops up, or the solo voice breaks into meaningless flourishes, or the chorus is used with the ponderous dignity of the Chandos Anthems. In either case there is little evidence of the composer's own conviction. But when the words express some more manageable idea the same aptness of melody and feeling for their rhythm comes to the rescue which was noticeable in the songs of 'Lyra Britannica.' The treble solo from 'O give thanks' (not the large eight-part anthem alluded to above) is a case in point:

Quite apart from the unobtrusive touch of realism in the treatment of the words 'Turn again,' this is a beautifully poised piece of melody, especially in the way it reaches up to the word 'rest' upon the highest note of the phrase. Unfortunately the convention which made it necessary to repeat words in anthems led him here and in other cases to weaken the force of his inspiration by repeating them to less significant phrases.

In an article in the Musical Times (January, 1910) on Boyce's instrumental sonatas, I pointed out that some movements among them start with delightful ideas which fail later because the composer had little grip of thematic development. It is somewhat the same with his anthems. The outline is apt to be blurred by a clumsy development, but that does not affect the beauty and sincerity of the initial thought. He excels most where the words present some definite emotional idea which he can translate into simple musical terms. For this reason the concentrated earnestness of the little four-part chorus, 'Save me, O God,' stands out above many of his larger anthems. Again the tentative poise of the question, 'O, where shall wisdom be found?' contrasted with the forceful answer, 'The fear of the Lord that is wisdom,' gives so individual a character to his best-known anthem as fully to account for the position it has gained in popular esteem. 'I have surely built Thee an house' is another in which the words govern the music at every point, if we leave out of count the perfunctory 'Hallelujahs' of the last chorus. The pompous statement of the first words by the bass voice, accompanied by a trumpet stop on the organ and arrested by the reflection 'but will God indeed dwell on the earth?' and later the prayer of Solomon answered by the chorus is imaged with wonderful appropriateness.

But the most striking contrast between Boyce's genuine, heartfelt style and his more artificial one is found in the two settings of the same words, 'Turn Thee unto me' (Psalm xxv., vv. 15-21). These are to be found in Vincent Novello's collection, vol. i., No. 12, and vol. iii., No. 44. The second is cut into a number of movements, and its whole effect is desultory and lacking in specific musical beauty and clearness of design. That in the first volume, however, which it should be noticed has lately been issued as one of the reprints of the Church Music Society, is shorter and expresses poignant feeling. Its most eloquent point is the transition from the first minor chorus to a long-phrased, sad melody in the major key:

This is so perfectly designed, both from the purely musical point of view and because of the true value which it sets upon each feature of the text, that one cannot hesitate to place it at the head of all Boyce's work. In this anthem we can forget the composer's environment, the limitations of his technique, and the effects of his scholarship. He has all his forces perfectly in hand. There is nothing superfluous, nothing artificial. Everything, from the broad contrasts of choral and solo voices to the smallest detail of vocal inflexion, serves to give expression to the deep longing which is the essence of the psalm.

DEBUSSY ON NATIONALITY IN MUSIC.

BY ERNEST NEWMAN.

There has been recently a festival of French music at Munich. It may not have been run on ideal lines: these affairs seldom are. The more pushful gentlemen have a way of forcing themselves to the front, and the quieter ones are edged into the background. There has been a little grumbling in the French Press from writers like M. Pierre Lalo, who feel that the festival has done a little harm as well as some good, but who honestly desire to bring about a better understanding between musical France and musical Germany. A discordant note, however, is struck by Debussy, who has delivered himself of some rather surly and petulant opinions to a correspondent of the Quest-Artiste. 'What have we to do over there?' he asks. 'Did they ask us to go? No! Then what is the use of this project? Everyone knows that we have been more than kind in our welcome of German musicians. In fifty years we shall see how much remains of these infatuations of ours. We like everything that comes from abroad. We clap our hands like children over any work that comes from afar—from Scandinavia, Germany, or the Latin countries—without properly estimating its real weight and value, without asking whether the emotions of souls foreign to our own can rouse sincere feeling in us. It will be better for us when we cease imitating weakly what these people say in their own language; when we cease to rave over false Italianism in music and false Ibsenism in literature; and when certain of our compatriots cease to make themselves ridiculous by attempting to be exotics. The Germans cannot understand us, any more than we ought to try to reach them. Munich . . . is indifferent to our art. The concerts of modern music there are attended only by a few cultivated amateurs. People will go to hear French music out of politeness. They will, perhaps, applaud, with that German courtesy that is so hard to endure. But I am certain that our art will not have conquered any ground in Germany. Some people regard the festival as a means of bringing us together through our music. Music is not made for that—and the hour is badly chosen.'

If this narrowness of mind is typical of the whole modern school of music that prides itself upon being peculiarly French, one can only regret that a foolish way of thinking that even politicians have begun to give up should have found a new home among musicians. Debussy and his fellows are pushing a good principle to a very bad extreme. The long Wagnerian tyranny in France, like every other tyranny, has provoked a revolt. That Frenchmen should be anxious to end the epoch of Wagner imitation is natural and laudable. That they should imagine they can only become Frenchmen by declaring themselves to be fundamentally different in soul from the Germans is deplorable. History and good sense alike are against their thesis. When Debussy says that neither race can or ought to try to appeal to the musical intelligence of the other, and that music is not made to overstep geographical frontiers, he is merely giving a colouring of bad sociology to a fit of temper. Wagner, it is piquant to note, used to talk in much the same amateurish way about 'the German spirit,' the 'German nature,' and so on, and appeal for an art born of the German climate. 'We must only write,' he says in a letter to Heine, of 1846, 'just as the poetic sense inborn in our German hearts dictates, never making the least concession to foreign modes . . . In this way we may win for ourselves once more a German school of original opera.' Everything that is good in the 'German spirit,' he thinks, has developed out of the original soul of the race. Their princes were un-German, because they drew so much of their culture from France. 'The Romanic nations'—crude, materialistic fellows, these—'abandon themselves to a dubious life of the moment, and, strictly speaking, have a sense of nothing but what the immediate present offers them,' whereas that splendid fellow the German—'God's German,' as Mr. Shaw would say—'builds his world of the present out of motives from all zones and ages.' Why do the nations so furiously talk nonsense about themselves and each other? Why is each of them so earnest in thanking God that it is not as the others are? We call this Pharisaism in the individual. What else can we call it in the race?

Any student of history could tell these irritable amateurs that no race produces its finest flowers of the soul, whether in art, science or philosophy, without plentiful fertilisation by the culture of other races. The self-contained and self-evolving great nation is a myth. One is almost tempted to say that 'the Frenchman,' 'the German,' 'the Englishman,' and all the rest of them are myths. Our good friends the nationalists and the folk-song enthusiasts almost seem to me to come to grief here. Before we begin to found a 'national school of music,' let us at least agree as to what the national characteristics are. Is there such a thing as 'the Englishman'? What is the common denominator between types so varied as Shakespeare, Milton, Blake, Pope, Swinburne, Meredith, William Morris, Byron, Carlyle, Charles II., Nell Gwynne, Florence Nightingale, Mrs. Aphra Behn, and Mrs. Gaskell—to extend the list no further. What and who is 'the Frenchman'? Is that elastic term to mean the same thing when we apply it to the Parisian, the Breton, the Provençal, and the Marseillais, to Montaigne, Pascal, Hugo, de Musset, Comte, Bossuet, Massillon, Voltaire, Verlaine, Berlioz, Auber, Debussy, David, Monet, and Manet? What is the characteristic French mind in fiction—Loti's or Zola's? What is the characteristic French mind in painting—David's or Gauguin's? What is the characteristic French mind in music—d'Indy's or Debussy's? And if there is no such thing—as there certainly is not—as the French, or the English, or the German mind, how can we speak of a national style that is the expression of that and nothing else? 'The Germans cannot understand us,' says Debussy. But the Germans do understand, and have always understood, whole territories of French art, and French literature, and French music; and if they do not admire Debussy's music as much as he would like, is that due to the French element in it or to the Debussyan element? And if the latter, why should Debussy draw from this the wild sociological conclusion that to fail to see art and life as he sees them, is to fail to comprehend the French mind? Is Debussy France?

So far, in fact, from the German and French minds being alien and immiscible products, the culture of each has always owed a great deal to the stimulus of the other. Medieval French humour was quickened by the German 'Till Eulenspiegel' and Sebastian Brandt's 'Ship of fools'; the French term 'espèglerie' is itself derived from Eulenspiegel. In philosophy the two nations have always been in the closest contact. Leibniz influenced French thought at a time when he was little regarded in Germany. The influence of Rousseau on Kant and Herder, of Hegel on Taine, of Schelling on Cousin, and of Nietzsche on a great deal of modern French thought, is too patent to need demonstration. If we turn to æsthetics and general literature we see how much Lessing owed to Du Bos and Caylus on the one hand and to Diderot on the other, and how, conversely, his own plays and his 'Hamburgische Dramaturgie' influenced French drama and criticism. Look, again, at the many currents of thought set going by Goethe in France, and at the French progeny that sprang from his Werther alone—Châteaubriand's René, Sénancour's Obermann, Madame de Staël's Delphine, and Benjamin Constant's Adolphe. Goethe, in his turn, except for one thoughtless moment, was ready to acknowledge his own intellectual debt to France. The French Romantic movement would never have been what it was but for the German influence; one of the war-cries of the young Romanticists was 'Vivent les Anglais et les Allemands.' Nothing would be easier than to show in detail that there has hardly been a generation for the last six or seven hundred years in which the mental life of one of the nations has not been quickened by the other. Debussy and his fellows would no doubt reply that each only imitates the other for a time, and that it is just this imitation that they are anxious to put an end to. But the imitation—the pseudo-French art of Germany and the pseudo-German art of France—is only a weak and impermanent by-product of the contact of the two cultures. When this passes away there remains a permanent influence for good. The Wagnerian tyranny of the last generation certainly led to a quantity of merely imitative French art; but can it be disputed that on the whole the Wagnerian upheaval has lifted French music, as it has all other music, to a higher plane of expression than it would now occupy had Wagner never been born? If Debussy's prophecy that modern French music will not conquer any ground in Germany comes true, then so much the worse for modern French music. If the nationalists are going to set up a distinction between human nature and French human nature, and assert that their art aims at appealing to the latter but not to the former, one can only say that they are very busily writing their own epitaph. But after all their works are wiser than their words. We can forgive a man who has written so much good music as Debussy arguing so ill. In his own wiser moments he confesses to a profound admiration for Bach; so that if this musician who would be regarded as the most French of the French can become the spiritual brother of the musician who is the most German of the Germans, the case is not quite hopeless. Debussy may rest assured that if Bach had only written for Germans instead of for humanity his following now would hardly have been larger than Debussy's; and that if the latter can only manage to make his music speak universal wisdom instead of the complacent tags of philosophy of a little Parisian coterie—as it sometimes does—he will conquer the world as Bach has done. In the last resort there is no such thing as English or French or German music. There are only two kinds of music—the good and the bad. If it be bad, we will loathe it even though it be written by our own brother. If it be good, we will bow the knee to it from whatever place on the map it may hail. 'La raison est de tous les pays,' as La Bruyère says.

THE WHOLE-TONE SCALE AND ITS PRACTICAL USE.

By G. H. CLUTSAM.

Some years ago I was under the impression that I had discovered certain combinations of sounds that were not to be explained by any theories founded on the ordinary diatonic or modal scale basis, or the laws of natural harmonics. This conclusion was arrived at in rather a haphazard and unexpected manner, and was the result of an experiment with the chords of the augmented fifth. A succession of these triads as under :

is a fairly common occurrence nowadays, and the thought suggested itself to try them in opposition by contrary motion, in the same way that an ordinary succession of sixths has so often been used :

In this passage those chords marked with an asterisk are in every respect dissonant, and only satisfy because the ear follows the progress of the separate parts, and anticipates the conclusion. Now, treating our augmented triads in similar fashion, only necessarily progressing chromatically, quite another effect is produced. There is no dissonance in any of the conflicting chords, but one immediately recognises that certain musical sounds are evolved that are not to be accounted for by any ordinary method, even stretched to extremes of license :

The chords, asterisked, which to unaccustomed ears may have at first a harsh effect, ultimately create a peculiarly satisfying impression, not only as a part of the progression in the example but in isolation. It will be noticed that of the chords above, three are ordinary augmented triads, twice stated, and that the other three are inversions of one chord of six notes containing two distinct augmented triads, clearly shown in the above arrangements where a certain notation has been retained. As all augmented triads remain undisturbed in their actual intervals by inversion save for this question of notation, therein partaking of the peculiarity of the diminished seventh, it will be obvious that in the given example there is room for considerable enharmonic alteration. The contents of this chord of six notes can be resolved into a complete scale of full tones, as below :

This particular form of whole-tone scale has been used in tentative fashion by some composers of the modern Russian and French schools. As far as the matter can be determined with a limited means of research and a general paucity of material, its use seems to have originated in Russia late in the past century, and as a melodic basis it was afterwards introduced with much more pretension and elaboration into the works of the later French composers, of whom Claude Debussy was undoubtedly the first to exploit a fascinating material.

In the last few years one or two of our own composers, naturally the younger section, have caught and exemplified a few of the salient characteristics of this scale, particularly those of scale form.

It will be obvious from Example 4, that a similar scale can be commenced on any of its intervals without creating any tonal variety. The only divergence, to the eye, from an ordinary diatonic or modal scale is, that an apparent skip of a third can occur between one or other of the intervals according to the notation. In Example 4, this happens between the B and D flat, but it could similarly exist elsewhere, i.e. :

Starting midway between any of the notes of the above scale we can form one more progression, and with this, exhaust our tonal matter :

This gives us, chord-wise, the following and remaining coalescence of sounds :

But the limits of these two combinations are more apparent than real. The possibilities of their use for modulatory and colour purposes are very considerable.

Colour and characteristic qualities in music have generally been obtained by quaint, and, from an artistic point, bizarre methods, particularly in the Scandinavian, Czech, and Slavonic schools. Apart from the legitimate effects gained by the use of various modal scales, ordinary tonic chords—dominant sevenths and ninths—have been freely employed in succession, without consideration of key relationship.

The result of this class of work when the novelty has worn off, is a certain cheap quality that is too external to be of value. In the same way, the adoption of quasi-national characteristics, such as the cadences peculiar to Hungarian, the melodic descent of the seventh to the fifth in Scandinavian music, and many other mannerisms and colloquialisms that can be easily recalled, have in the end a wearying effect on an educated ear.

Curiously enough, the German, who, as Heine somewhere suggests, has always the greatest respect for his grandmother, has never associated himself with any attempt to break away from the traditional laws of his beloved art, but gone steadily on in the development of the way already laid out by his great predecessors, rather than venture on side paths of innovations that may prove to be 'blind alleys.'

An apology is scarcely required for treating the subject in a rather discursive manner, as, before proceeding with the analysis of this new material, it seems necessary to at least justify its call for serious recognition ; and I can unhesitatingly claim that any student accustoming himself to the use of these sounds, studying them, and feeling them, till they become part and parcel of his musical equipment, will be more than repaid by the extra facility and grip he will acquire over all other chromatic and extreme harmonies. It is this idea solely, i.e., the widening of the harmonic field, that is the purport of this article.

Instances will occur to students who are fairly intimate with modern work, especially French, of bare statements of harmonies based on the tonal scale. I use the phrase 'bare statement' for the reason that there has been a more or less childish toying with these unusual sounds, as though the composer were so proud of his new material he must needs show it off even at inopportune moments. Many of the existent examples are little better than puerilities, and it can be taken for granted that when this scale is used only for its own sake it no longer becomes assistant to inspiration.

A simple treatment of musical ideas at this period of production is futile. A composer who undertakes to write simply and clearly, rhythmically, harmonically, and melodically, is in an impossible position. It has all been done, over and over again. Trivial themes, conventional construction, and uninventive variations can no longer give interest to an educated listener to music. A plain statement of a thought has never made a poem. In music, as in poetry, it is the method of expression that removes a thought from the realms of the commonplace, unless the thought be absolutely new and poetical in itself. Consequently, there is little probability of any composer saying anything 'new' in the strict sense of the word. He can only presume to say something differently. Music can only express elementary emotions with a certainty of the suggestions being understood; all effort beyond this is a dependence on the education of the ear, and this culture is yet in its infancy.

In music, the foundations of expression are three: Melody, Harmony and Structure.

Melody, or tune, as generally understood, is a pleasant arrangement of single notes of the ordinary major, minor, or modal scale; the latter being mainly responsible for most songs of peoples that have been passed from generation to generation. The inclination to support melody by other sounds, either vocal or instrumental, called forth attempts at harmony (firstly by contrapuntal methods), and the judgment of the finest ears was afterwards interpreted by a quasi-scientific process. In the course of time, melody and harmony became vitally connected. Even the street-boy whistling the commonest popular air, instinctively associates its simple harmonies with his tune. In the advanced and complex stages of composition, more often than not the conceived harmony alone will suggest or elaborate the melody, and a composer may also in developing his ideas treat the suggested melody to further harmonic variation.

Structure.—The architectonics of music need not concern us here. All we have to consider is whether combinations of sounds based on the tonal scale are adjunct to harmony, and capable also of invoking melody in the ordinary sense of the term. A casual reason for a negative answer to the latter consideration may be that the scale, consisting only of six notes and these all whole-tones, must be extremely limited in variety, particularly as each scale contains within itself one harmony only, which makes for hopeless monotony. But I hope to show that as an addition to the ordinary methods of expression, as creating a feeling of colour and atmosphere, there is no doubt whatever it will take ultimately a natural place in the machinery of composition.

First of all let us see what one of these full six-tone chords contains, that can bring it into line with sounds we may already be accustomed to. The nearest association is with the dominant ninth (1):

If, as in (2), the fifth be flattened, or, as in (3), sharpened, in each case we have five notes of the scale; and obviously, using both flattened and sharpened fifths, changing one or the other enharmonically, we have the complete chord (4 and 5). This suggests that the trend of this chord in its method of resolution is peculiarly that of a form of dominant ninth with sharpened or flattened fifth.

Here the progressions of each individual part are given in strict accordance with the notation adopted, and in each case the resolutions show a distinct dominant atmosphere; so much so, that one is able to indicate the root note in each instance. These chords can of course also carry out the well-known form of successive dominant sevenths or ninths, e.g.:

This passage will be explained later on.

It will be noticed that when the resolution proceeds as to the 6-4 inversion of a tonic, skipping the intermediate dominant, well-understood in the natural form, as below:

one of the parts will incline towards an added and major seventh on the tonic triad. This occurs with the minor sixth or augmented fifth from the note of the chord that is being treated as dominant, i.e., the upper part in the following examples, in each case an augmented fifth:

These cadences, or rather the melodic progression, have a Griegish, Scandinavian flavour.

The added seventh can proceed to the tonic or return to the dominant, or through the sixth quite satisfactorily. This inclination, melodically, will be easily comprehended; but as an inner part it requires careful treatment. Of course, in suggesting limitations, one is appealing to the necessity of consulting the ear. All sorts of extreme crudities are practised by the younger composers of all countries, presumably in an endeavour to 'find' themselves: chords with no relation, harmonic or æsthetic, are jumbled together without consideration, without meaning, and with only a dubious musical value. As long as something unconformable to convention is arrived at, the question of reason and legitimacy is neglected. A child playing with a paint-box can attain something artistically equivalent. It is for this reason I endeavour to show that, to the trained ear—which is, and always will be, the one guide in all musical questions—these proposed additions to the composers' equipment are logical and justifiable. Naturally, certain laws in the progression of parts that may be suggested, are the outcome of a personal feeling, and it is quite possible that with familiarity many modifications or extensions may come to be recognised as quite consistent with orthodox development. This point will acquire greater importance when the use of the scale is based on quite independent lines; that is, when the chords are not treated as dominant, wherein the ordinary feelings of progression or resolution are a sufficient guide. Coming to the use of the chord itself, as detached from the form we have been examining, the distinct and determinate idiom it conveys will be more evident. In the long range of music that we now look upon as classical (classical, as it has survived), and in that, though nearer to us, showing strong evidence of becoming classic, there is no sign or suspicion of any harmony that corresponds with that of the tonal chord.

Even by Debussy and his followers its use is confined to creating an artificial and exotic atmosphere, suggesting confines to which it is by no means limited. It is an excellent medium for a delicate and sensitive musical nature, but it is also full of broad, vigorous, healthy possibilities. In all the early work of Strauss there is only one curt example which might have been suggested by knowledge of the tonal chord, but more probably has arisen from quite another consideration. This is in the 'Tailleur,' and occurs twice, thus:

Of course, two essential notes are missing. Cf. this example from Charpentier's 'Louise':

And again, it might be the feeling of such a chord as the following from Schumann:

but in its solitariness, suddenness and sense it has all the idiom of the tonal chord. In 'Salome,' however, there is a distinct admission of the scale as an effect, and in 'Elektra' many passages recognise its harmonies. In one respect it is peculiar that many extreme harmonies resulting from slightly extravagant treatment of ordinary chords show signs of relationship with the tonal chord. It might be opportune to illustrate this point as it is suggested by the above Schumann extract:

In the ordinary way, these chords have conventional resolutions; as constituents of the tonal chord to be shown later, they may proceed anywhere. Here is a little example of the completion of a dominant chord. It is the final cadence in a pianoforte piece by Mr. Balfour Gardiner:

In Example 17 the second chord is simply a dominant ninth with a flattened fifth (see Example 8, No. 2), which is turned into a full tonal chord in the second version.

In this full chord there is nothing at all startling, and it is very probable that in many a similar passage the additional note (the A sharp in 18) would pass unheeded even by the most orthodox and conservative auditor, so naturally does it complete the dominant tendency.

The real trial to the ear is in the practise of the scale with its natural harmonies unattended by alternations with chords having an ordinary diatonic or chromatic basis. The chief difficulty in listening to modern works wherein bold use is made of contrapuntal devices, is to follow the progress of the different parts; and when, as in the following example from Strauss:

the parts themselves are constituted of complete harmonies that have no relation whatever to each other, the demand on the acuteness of perception in the listener is considerable. The difficulty of the passage lies in its terseness. It is a condensation of much intention in a small space, and the ear is expected to follow the parts in a manner that is simply illustrated in Example 2 above. The conduct of the tonal chord is the inverse of all this. It is homogeneity itself. Once the association and relationship of the intervals are understood, all that is required of it, perhaps all that it is capable of, will quickly be manifest. As before stated, melodically, resources are limited. What might be considered the conventional form is quite simple, and is amply illustrated in the two following passages from the 'Pelléas and Mélisande' of Debussy:

Example 20 is a plain scale movement harmonized above with an ordinary augmented fifth. The other fifth in the scale would serve equally well, i.e.:

as a plain accompaniment. Example 21 is self-explanatory, but notice the skip in the melodic movement. In Example 23 is an extension of the motive in Example 21:

Many similar instances are to be found in the later work of Debussy, also crude passages, such as the following:

This, from Charpentier, is also self-explanatory:

Of course, the scale is also capable of ornamental treatment, extension into arpeggios and all elaborative devices that can be extended to ordinary diatonic chords. Piquant cadenzas are possible and effective. Example 26 is by Mr. Cyril Scott:

The notation given in Example 27 would be more consistent with the tonality of the piece, and avoid unnecessary accidentals.

MUSINGS IN A LIBRARY.

VI.

To me the most objectionable feature about all these old treatises which I have mentioned is that while they all expound the rudiments of music and (with varying success) harmony and counterpoint, they mostly profess to treat of Composition. In no single case, even in the 'courses' or 'schools' in several large folio volumes, is there as much information given on the subject of actual musical composition as in that little primer of Stainer's, which only professes to touch the fringe of the subject. All that is done is to give specimens of various kinds from the works of Italian writers—the older the better—and to hold them up to the reader's profound veneration. Even the mighty Prout did not get further than this: to analyse 'the classics' was his recipe for making a composer. Stay! I must do him the justice to admit that in his wonderful volumes on Form he traces the growth of music from the motive of two notes to the entire symphony. But in common with all his predecessors he mistakes classification for instruction, and thinks that to tabulate is to teach.

Now I really waded through all these wearisome volumes in order to find out whether anyone has ever realised any of the difficulties that the embryo composer meets with in his early attempts and sought to help him over them. Not one! If you will believe me, not one person has ever alluded to the fact that the beginner suffers dreadfully from getting 'stuck' in his works. I have never forgotten the misery of that sensation—compiling these foolish tomes, emptying out their own mental lumber instead of trying to smooth the path of the beginner.

But do not let me degenerate into mere general scolding and censoriousness; let actual examples confirm me. Here is a mighty volume, printed in 1760, 'L'Arte Armonica, or a Treatise on the Composition of MUSIC in three Books. By Giorgio Antoniotto.' Books 1 and 2 are occupied by the exasperating sense of impotence—nor my resentment against my teachers who could not explain the cause and at least put me on the road to overcoming it. It was many a long year before I discovered the secret, and when I did my resentment at the needless waste of my youthful time and trouble was only equalled by my contempt for the minds that could occupy themselves with the usual dissertation upon the Greek modes, followed by Rudiments of Music, Harmony and Counterpoint. About the middle of the third book we come to this luminous utterance:

'A little knowledge of the Art oratoria or poetica will certainly be of no little service for adapting the properest sounds, simple or combined, to the various expressions, as narratives, interrogations, exclamations, lamentations, conclusions and all other sorts of declamations. But at last the composer should put himself into the same passion into which he would move his auditors by his compositions; this may serve for a general rule to be depended upon, because the enumeration of all observations in the divers applications of sounds in melody, and combined in harmony to the just expression of words is of so much extension, and subject to an infinity of distinctions, all which cannot be compassed in a moderate space.

'The instrumental music cannot pretend to equal the vocal, of which it is only a copy, and a copy in miniature. . . .'

Making every allowance for the clumsiness of the translation, what possible assistance to the would-be composer can be gleaned from such froth as this? The last sentence is rather curious: in 1769 Mozart's and Haydn's Symphonies were in existence, and Beethoven's yet to come. Signor Antoniotto, believing only in vocal music, might be expected to have sound views on opera. He has, but their expression is confined to this sentence:

'Opera. It is evident that without a good and proper piece of poetry a moving music cannot be done.'

The remainder of the work is then devoted to a description of the various classes of compositions and the author's opinions upon them. He does not forget to extol the ancient and decry the degenerate moderns (of 1760).

Perhaps we have pitched upon a bad specimen: let us try another. Here is one of forty years later date—Choron: Les Principes de Composition des écoles d'Italie—three mighty folio volumes, which have formed the basis of nearly all subsequent French theory books. The very preface extends to twenty-eight pages. As before, Composition proper is not touched upon until we come to vol. iii., which is entitled Rhétorique Musicale, the previous volumes having been devoted to the grammar of music. We search carefully, and presently come to §10: De l'idée musicale et de l'invention. This looks promising, and we hope for illumination at the first words, but alas! find only this disappointing statement. —I translate:

'Invention is the art—or rather, the faculty—of finding ideas. This term indicates that we consider it almost entirely as a gift of Nature. . . . It is this which creates those new and original productions which resemble nothing which has preceded them, and which serve as models for all that come after.'

Is this any more helpful to the student than the flatulence of Signor Antoniotto? Gliding from this difficult subject, M. Choron proceeds to repeat the ancient, ancient stories about the origin of Scarlatti's Cat's Fugue and Handel's 'Harmonious Blacksmith.' After this he holds forth on the subject of taste, and finally contradicts his first utterance by quoting the Andante of Haydn's 'Surprise' Symphony as an example of a vulgar idea made great by the skill (not the inspiration) of its author.

This, he says with perfect truth, is true greatness in art; but he gives no hint as to how skill is to be attained; indeed, he implies that it is a 'faculty'—or, as the lazy amateur puts it, 'some people have a gift, and it is of no use trying if you haven't it'—a sentiment which begs the whole question.

Let us try once more: here is 'La Panharmonie Musicale,' by R. H. Colet, dedicated to Rossini, another large work, written in Paris, 1837. It goes over exactly the same ground as Choron, but gives a little more space to the subject of Composition. Here are the principal headings—Introduction—of Unity—of Taste (he tells us that Reicha says: 'The faculty of invention often announces itself with a dangerous impetuosity,' and advises a course of geometry or algebra to 'calm the effervescence of a too ardent imagination')—of Clearness and Elegance of Style (this before the student has been shown how to string two periods together)—of Expression (a page-and-a-half of sheer gush)—finally, of Invention: 'c'est un mystère impénétrable—jamais un esprit froid ne saura créer en musique: c'est le secret du génie.' Which is the amateur's creed put in more elegant diction.

Having thus disposed of the matter, he goes off airily to the subject of Instrumentation, where we will leave him and try another author.

Weber's 'Theory of Composition' is in two volumes, and contains eight hundred pages of small print: of these, Harmony pure and simple occupies how many, do you think? Seven hundred and ninety nine and a-half, leaving one small section of just half-a page for the ostensible subject of the book. Mr. Weber's precepts are sound enough, as far as they go, but they might be fuller with advantage. All he says is: 'We will first invent merely one voice and then add to this several others. In this way we shall obtain a piece of music in which everything has been invented by ourselves. At another time we will invent merely a series of harmonic progressions and then carry it out into separate voices. . . . In this way we shall at length become able to perform all these operations at once, and thus produce at one operation a pure musical composition.'

As the advertisement says, it's so simple!

Reicha calls his large work 'Cours de Composition Musicale, ou Traité complet d'Harmonie pratique,' implying that the two subjects are one. There is not a word about Composition in his whole book, and I have failed to find the sentence about Invention accredited to him above. Czerny's 'School of Composition,' in three large volumes, is the same. Ascoli, in his gigantic tome, gives profuse examples of every kind of Italian vocal music, and criticises them very ably, but he gives no atom of advice to the neophyte how to proceed in his own work, any more than do the others. All these 'ancients' seem to teach, in fact, on the fine old principle of 'sit down and try, and keep on trying till you can do it,' a plan which transfers all the labour of teaching from the instructor to the pupil. Just so, not one of the old books on pianoforte or violin affords the slightest help upon how to play, nor does any treatise on Instrumentation (not even Berlioz's) do any more than give a description of the different instruments used; it was reserved for the degenerate moderns to evolve the whole art of teaching, or at least to write it down on paper. The beautiful frontispiece to Geminiani's 'Guida Armonica,' here reproduced, indicates clearly what was the current idea of the art of musical composition a century ago. I wish I could say that it had been entirely swept away, but I fear it is even yet cherished by the foolish and unthinking.

Occasional Notes.

Under the title 'A great neglected composer,' Dr. Ernest Walker contributes an article in the October number of the New Music Review (New York) on the works of Joachim. Until he was thirty years of age, the great Hungarian violinist had no definite intention of appealing to the world solely as an interpretative artist. As a young man he produced compositions of serious purpose and high import that gained him a reputation equal to that of Brahms. 'I have heard (and can well believe),' says the writer, 'that his decision to devote all his energies to other fields was considerably due to the generous desire not to appear in any attitude of rivalry towards the younger friend, in whose heart-whole service he spent his life.' Two main reasons are given for the neglect of Joachim's compositions. One is that they demand closer acquaintance for their proper appreciation than almost any other compositions in existence. The other is that his great influence and personality as a violinist make it hard to believe that he could have attained eminence in any other capacity. Inasmuch as Joachim never crossed the Atlantic, the second reason affects Americans less than Europeans, and it may be that his works have a future in the New World. To those of us who have had the opportunity of hearing them, their austerity comes most readily to the memory.

It will be welcome and interesting news to a great number of musicians all over the world that a Music Library is to be instituted at Oxford, that will hold the same position in the musical world that the Bodleian holds in the worlds of literature and learning. The moving spirit in the enterprise is Dr. H. P. Allen, of New College, whose enthusiasm in all that he undertakes, and inspiring personality, may be expected to bring him success in his task. The object of the promoters is to provide a library of reference that shall be as completely representative as possible not only of the great masters, whose names are household words, but of those musicians who have done spade-work in founding the art of music. Such a collection, based on the needs of the student of music, should stimulate inquiry and research into the development of the art, the characteristics of composers and schools and their mutual influence, and should bring the earnest worker into close touch with many matters that he has hitherto taken for granted or passed over from lack of opportunity to study them. Among the working arrangements at present decided is the provision that full-scores shall be open to inspection only in the rooms of the library, and that pianoforte arrangements of scores shall be available for students to take out.

Already a nucleus of the library has been formed. The whole of the music collection left by the late Rev. Dr. Bellamy, President of St. John's, has been given by his sister, Mrs. Tilden, for the furtherance of the scheme. It contains the complete works of Bach and Mozart (as published by Messrs. Breitkopf & Härtel), and Handel (as published by the German Handel Society), a number of Purcell's works and an enormous number of scores by Gluck, Cherubini, Spohr, Méhul, Auber, Rossini, and other composers of various schools. It contains also some rare and valuable books on music and editions of such composers as Lassus and Croce. From another quarter has come the complete Breitkopf & Härtel edition of Palestrina, in about forty volumes; the similar edition of Lassus will be presented as publication proceeds. Dr. Allen is working to procure a sum of at least £500 to enable him to set the library in working order. It is to be hoped that a ready response will be made to his call for funds, for his scheme is one that deserves well of the world of musicians.

In connection with the centenary of the firm of Novello, which will be celebrated next year, the following remarks from a speech delivered by the chairman at a recent meeting of shareholders will be of interest:

'The hundredth year will then have passed since Vincent Novello issued two folio volumes of sacred music, for use in the Roman Church, in 1811, and from that time no year passed during his life without the issue of important publications, written, edited, and published by Vincent Novello. He was composer, editor, and publisher, and especially as editor he did work for which all British musicians and amateurs should be grateful; unfortunately, they forget, and are not as grateful as they should be. Joseph Alfred Novello had not arrived at the years of discretion for ordinary individuals when, in 1829, he started, under the immediate direction of his father, as a practical music publisher. He was then only nineteen years of age.

'It is recorded in Mrs. Cowden-Clarke's "Life and Labours of Vincent Novello," that his eldest son, Alfred, began business as a music publisher in a very modest way at 67, Frith Street, Soho, with a couple of parlour windows and a glass door, with a few title-pages bearing composers' names of sterling merit and Vincent Novello's as editor. I have no doubt those little pages were pasted on to the glass door and parlour windows by Alfred Novello's own hands. In 1834 the business was removed to 69, Dean Street—still in Soho—where it remained till 1868, and here the printing works were continued till 1898. In 1841 my father, Henry Littleton, joined the business in a subordinate capacity; but he soon showed, apparently, that he had inherited the energy of Vincent and Alfred Novello, and had even added to it. In 1868 the publishing business was removed to 1, Berners Street, and in 1898 our works immediately adjoining were constructed, while a few years afterwards the business was transferred to the present premises. We glory in the name of Novello. Time passes very quickly—new generations forget the past very easily—but I believe that very few individuals have done more to advance the art of music in this country than the house of Novello.'

Sir Alexander Mackenzie's beautiful 'dramatic oratorio' 'The Rose of Sharon,' which was produced at the Norwich festival in 1884, and has enjoyed popularity ever since, is about to receive a new lease of life by the publication of an edition embodying some important changes that the composer has seen fit to carry out. The prologue and epilogue have been discarded. The dramatic action has been hastened by the omission of certain passages and repetitions, and in places the words have been revised.

The chorus of women in Part 2, 'This is the day which the Lord hath made, we will rejoice and be glad in it,' has been entirely re-written and given a more elaborate texture. The principal changes have been made in Part 4, which has been practically composed afresh. The solemn chorus that served as an introduction has been replaced by an orchestral passage of some importance. The alterations made in the remainder have the effect of greatly increasing the significance of the musical setting and concentrating the musical interest. It is only natural that modern influences can be traced in this new version. The work will be launched upon its new career under excellent auspices, for it is to be performed by the Alexandra Palace Choral Society, under Mr. Allen Gill, on November 5.

The retirement of Dr. W. H. Cummings from the principalship of the Guildhall School of Music is an event that provokes many reflections. Dr. Cummings has done great service to the cause of musical progress in this country during his long and strenuous life, and he had earned his right to rest even when, fourteen years ago, at the age of sixty-five, he undertook the arduous and, one might say, harassing duties of supervising the work of the Guildhall School of Music. His career has been a very honourable and useful one. We need not now recount his achievements, because a full sketch of his life, accompanied by a portrait, was given in our issue for February, 1898. His numerous friends will all hope that he will pass the remainder of his days in peaceful serenity.

Musical honours won by women claim attention this month. Miss Janet Salisbury, of the Cheltenham Ladies' College, has taken the degree of Mus. Doc. (Durham). She is the only lady who has taken this degree by examination, and there are only three lady Doctors of Music in England. The last of these was the Honorary Doctorate recently conferred upon Miss Ethel Smyth by the University of Durham. The Mendelssohn Prize of the Königl. Hochschule at Charlottenburg has been awarded to Miss Beatrice Harrison, the violoncellist, whose sister, Miss Mary Harrison, is well-known as a violinist. Miss Harrison is said to be the first foreign-born candidate and the first woman to obtain this honour, and her success has caused a sensation in Germany. Her teachers were Professor Whitehouse, under whom she studied at the Royal College of Music, and Professor Hugo Becker in Berlin.

We have seen in a contemporary recently the suggestion made that the authorities of St. Paul's Cathedral might consider the possibility of arranging a daily organ recital from, say, 1.30 till 2, for the benefit of those who find themselves at a loose end when in the neighbourhood at that time. One writer infers that only an organ recital would tempt some to enter the cathedral. We, though fond enough of the organ, and particularly of that in question, find a half-hour spent in quiet meditation in the glorious church refreshing enough for its own sake. Another correspondent suggests that the expenses incurred might well be met by an alms-dish at the doors. Apart from the unlikelihood of the offerings being generous enough, we dislike the everlasting collection. But there would be many difficulties beyond this. Who, for instance, would be the recitalists? Their name would be legion, and the work of the authorities a burden. In our opinion the cathedral and its organ should be used only for the high purpose for which they were built, viz., the Church services.

In these days when music at seaside resorts has become a theme of discussion, some attention should be paid to the fine work done at Southsea by Lieut. George Miller, M.V.O., bandmaster (for nearly twenty-five years) of the Royal Marine Light Infantry. His efforts on behalf of music in this neighbourhood began in 1888 with 'Storry's popular concerts,' which took place in the Pier Pavilion. The process of educating musical taste had to be begun at the beginning and carried on slowly. Lieut. Miller believes that the turning point was a newspaper notice pointing out 'the absurdity of playing a symphony at a Pier concert.' From that time progress never ceased. The Amateur Orchestral Society and other organizations helped, and the public responded. The concerts now given regularly by the R.M.L.I. in the Pavilion (well-warmed, in happy contrast with its inhospitable chilliness in 1888) are one of the chief attractions of Southsea. The present Winter season commenced on October 8. The programmes of the first four concerts, given in the afternoons and evenings of that date and October 15, contain the following: Selections from 'Butterfly,' 'I Pagliacci,' 'Merrie England,' 'Romeo and Juliet,' 'La Gioconda,' Sibelius's 'Finlandia' and 'Valse Triste,' Jarnefelt's 'Praeludium,' the 'Tannhäuser' and '1812' Overtures. The solo artists included Miss Ada Forrest, Miss Phyllis Lett and Mr. Monk Gould. Twopence admits to the Pier and the Pavilion; sixpence to a reserved seat.

The programme of the Bayreuth Festival of 1911 is now issued. Two cycles of the 'Ring' will be given—July 25-28 and August 14-17. 'Die Meistersinger' will be given on July 22 (the opening of the festival), July 31, August 5, 12 and 19. These performances are given in connection with performances of 'Parsifal' on July 23, August 1, 4, 11 and 20, to form five series. An equal number of seats must be taken for the adjoining performances of the two operas, in order to keep the series complete. Other performances of 'Parsifal' will be given on August 7 and 8. In all, twenty performances will take place. The six operas can be heard in succession either at the beginning of the series, July 22 to 28, or at the end, August 14 to 20. Tickets for the 'Ring' cycles are issued at £4; tickets for 'Die Meistersinger' or 'Parsifal' are £1 each. In the Bayreuth Theatre all seats are almost equally good for seeing and hearing. Performances commence at 4 p.m. (except 'Rheingold,' 5 p.m.) and terminate about 10 p.m. The intervals last about an hour. The London agent is Mr. Alfred Schulz-Curtius, 44, Regent Street.

Humours of the Press, unconscious and otherwise, are, like the poor, always with us. We confess some mystification at the statement of a London critic, in reference to Kubelik's recital, that:

In the earlier part of the programme, assisted by the New Symphony Orchestra and Mr. Lauda Ronald, he played the Tchaikovsky to Max Bruch's work in G minor, giving picturesque interpretations of each work.

Is 'playing the Tchaikovsky' one of Punch's 'forgotten sports'? And why should Kubelik so far forget his customary modesty of demeanour? Perhaps it was owing to the presence of Lauda. The Sheffield singers appear to have encountered unexpected trials during their recent tour in Germany. For instance, when they arrived on the platform at Leipsic, according to the correspondent of a Sheffield paper, 'the men appeared to have shrunk more than the women.' There is matter for thought in the following advertisement in a London evening daily :

Potman-pianist.—Smart man for general work of country public ; must be a good player and able to pick up any song. Those not afraid of work may apply to Reason comes to a standstill, however, in face of an advertisement in a German paper which is to this effect : At the Catholic Church in Kammerswaldau the post of verger-organist is vacant. The duties are as follows : to play the organ at four services, and to lead the singing ; to secure the services of singers, rehearse them and, as they cannot be obtained in the town, provide the expenses of their journey and meals ; to perform the functions of verger, including clerk's work, but not including bell-ringing and cleaning ; while occupied at the organ, to provide a deputy-verger ; to be at the vicar's service for baptisms and so forth. The yearly salary offered for the post is forty-eight marks, with a special grant of fifteen marks for the deputy-verger and four for the organ-blower.

Criticism up-to-date ! We read in a contemporary devoted to art that, at a leading London church, performances of Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater' and Brahms's 'Requiem' were given without accompaniment. Was this in accordance with the composer's intention, and might such things possibly account for Brahms's refusal to visit this country ? We are also informed by the same writer that the 'Stabat Mater' contains chaotic harmonies, unusual intervals, and frequent changes of key. When this appears in an artistic journal, and in one which is not subject to the pressure of a daily issue, we may well ask if we are becoming a musical nation.

THE NEW 'GROVE' ON WELSH MUSIC.

By D. EMLYN EVANS.

The article dealing with the above subject in the former edition of the Dictionary, is replaced in the new issue of the work by a fresh contribution from the pen of Mr. Frank Kidson. That this should differ pretty considerably from the first article is not altogether surprising, perhaps. A good many things have happened since 1889 ; and although the vexed question in regard to the origin of certain tunes classified as Welsh may still be much where it was left by Mr. William Chappell half-a-century (or more) ago, the spirit of inquiry has been abroad, and people's activity on the increase in collecting and comparing what may lie ungathered of the folk-song of the various nationalities inhabiting these islands.

The new article fills some sixteen columns, not counting those occupied by the bibliographical list, and contains observations covering much ground, and which certainly are not always of quite an uncontroversial character. An adequate discussion of its contents would therefore be impossible here ; and all I can attempt is to touch upon a few of the more salient points. The truth of the aphorism that the evil which men do lives after them, is only too well exemplified in connection with Welsh national music : the absurd pretensions put forward by the old harpers in the prefaces to their collections, and their negligence and indiscriminate in the matter of contents. These have been held as chastening rods over their descendants unto this day ; and our present critic is not disposed to let the opportunity pass by unutilised.

No Welsh musical critic of any note credits the fables promulgated by Blind Parry, Edward Jones, &c., in their collections. If a talented musical editor of our own day subscribes to such 'foolish and romantic statements'—to quote Mr. Kidson's very appropriate characterization of the legends about 'Captain Morgan,' and the antiquity of 'Nos Galan,' &c.—it simply illustrates the fact that Welsh musicians have not as a rule been men possessed of marked literary ability and critical acumen, with possibly one or two exceptions, and they have been more or less handicapped by circumstances. Welsh historians, again, have been but poor musicians, and have therefore treated upon music, if at all, quite inadequately. The professional musician is only now establishing himself in Wales. His work in the past has been done, as far as it may, by the amateur, whose activities were generally limited, and his usual vehicle of speech his native language. But it is certain that prominent Welsh musicians have for many years, in the Press and from the platform, spoken in no uncertain terms concerning the above matters.

In regard to 'doubtful melodies,' it may be safely assumed that the Welsh people have no desire to annex as their own, melodies which can be proved to be the bona fide property of another nation. Each claim, however, should be thoroughly examined and tested. Mr. Kidson speaks of the Welsh harpers 'who were accustomed to travel about the country for a livelihood, and that it is impossible to assume that these wandering minstrels played nothing but Welsh tunes.' Quite so. And as there were Scotch, Irish and English strolling minstrels, it is just as 'impossible to assume' that they restricted their respective répertoires to tunes of their own nationality. Most likely travelling musicians, then as now, suited their own tastes or the fancies of their clients, picking up other nations' pieces and dropping others of their own by the way, with no thought as to the question of their origin. Some specimens of well-known Welsh melodies may be found amongst Continental nations. What the story of their migration may be, no one can say. And no one can always determine definitely what is Welsh or otherwise, under a condition of such mixed nationalities as exists in this kingdom.

Priority of publication is not at all times a sufficient and fair proof of ownership, however strongly it may appear so at first sight. Anyone versed in Welsh history, and acquainted with the adverse conditions under which the country laboured for long generations, will not be in any way surprised at the paucity of Welsh musical publications, and musical data generally. The first Welsh printing press in Wales was not set up until the year 1719 ; and, so far as is known, the first book of Welsh music (or part of it) was not printed there until nearly a century later—1816. This will account, partly at any rate, for the paucity referred to. Printing music was beyond poor little Wales's resources. It should also be borne in mind that oral teaching was the traditional bardic method of imparting knowledge. Mr. Chappell has emphasised the evidence of copy argument almost to its furthestmost limit, but some of the claims advanced by him are so extreme as to carry their own refutation. No claim, however, is more astonishing than that of Mr. Kidson regarding 'The bells of Aberdovey,' and which I now learn of for the first time. No evidence whatever is brought forward in support of this, beyond certain assumptions based upon negative inferences. If the song is Dibdin's, one would fain ask why this delay of sixty-six years in asserting its nationality, since it was published in Miss M. J. Williams's Welsh collection in 1844; and why has it not been included in some of the 'Songs of England' side by side with Dibdin's undoubted songs? Fortunately, the preservation of the words, doggerel though they are, provides us with strong internal evidence in support of its Welsh origin. It is quite conceivable that the parody could have been evolved out of a proper Welsh version; but to imagine the converse—that the charming Welsh lyric which has been handed down to us is the outcome of that parody—is unthinkable. The form and 'fit' of the parody also indicate the hand of one who had far more knowledge of Welsh than Dibdin was likely to have possessed, and who had as a basis a structure made of proper Welsh material to work upon.

Some other matters of interest discussed in the article must be left untouched, for the present anyhow. But before closing, it may be suggested that the concluding remarks on 'penillion' singing, would be better for a complete revision. The North Wales and the South Wales (so-called) styles are mixed up together, and Idris Vychan is quoted more or less incorrectly, and a subject which is somewhat abstruse in itself is rendered still more difficult. In this particular at least, the old article in the first edition of the book was more illuminating. The bibliography of Welsh National Music at the end of the new article seems to be fairly complete, and should prove useful.

THE IRISH PROVENANCE OF THREE ENGLISH SEA-SONG MELODIES.

BY W. H. GRATTAN FLOOD.

In the present article I mean to give evidence for the Irish provenance of three English sea-song melodies, namely 'Rodney's glory,' 'The Arethusa,' and 'To Rodney we will go.' The two former tunes were composed by Turloch O'Carolan, while the third is an old Irish pipe melody of the early 18th century.

1. 'Rodney's glory' enjoys the distinction of being completely Irish, both as to words and music, and we have undoubted proof as to their origin. The song was written by an Irish poet named Eoghan ruadh O'Sullivan, who had joined the British Navy in 1781, and was one of those who sailed with the English fleet under Admiral Lord Rodney. O'Sullivan was born at Meentogues, near Killarney, in 1748, and acquired a good classical education at a 'hedge school' at Faha, also learning English. He was steeped to the lips in Irish, and was a most celebrated Irish poet. Curiously enough his amatory verses led to his flight from Fermoy, County Cork, and to his enlisting in the British service. He fought at the famous naval battle, 'not far from old Fort Royal' on April 12, 1782, when Lord Rodney brilliantly defeated De Grasse, securing the French Admiral's flagship the Ville de Paris. Rodney himself describes the battle as 'the severest one fought at sea and the most glorious for England.' To win the favour of Rodney the Irish poet wrote an English Ode, entitled 'Rodney's glory,' which he sang to O'Carolan's old air 'Rígh Sheamus' (King James). There are eight verses in this laudatory lyric, but two will be sufficient to quote. I append the music and words of the first verse and the words alone of the second verse. Let me add that this was the only English song attempted by O'Sullivan, as all his lyrics were in the Irish language. The melody is a really beautiful specimen of O'Carolan's powers, and it ought to be revived. Moreover, it fits O'Sullivan's verses admirably.

RODNEY'S GLORY.

Composed by TURLOGH O'CAROLAN.

'Twas in the year of Eighty-two
The Frenchmen knew full well, 'tis true,
Brave Rodney did their fleet subdue
Not far from old Fort Royal.
Full early by the morning's light,
The proud De Grasse appeared in sight,
And thought brave Rodney to affront,
With colours spread at each mast-head
Lay pendants, too, both white and red,
A signal for engagement.

2. A glance at the music of 'Rodney's glory' is almost sufficient proof for the identity of the composer of the fine tune to which Shield set 'The Arethusa.' No one but O'Carolan could have written such a characteristically Irish melody, and were no other proof forthcoming for the provenance of 'The Arethusa' it would be sufficient to point to the structure of 'Rodney's glory' as convincing evidence. Mr. Alfred Moffat has rightly included 'The Arethusa' in his well-selected 'Minstrelsy of Ireland,' but it is not a little disconcerting to find it included in 'English songs of the Georgian period.' The structural features on which Mr. Moffat relied were based on a similarity with those of O'Carolan's 'Abigail Judge,' but had Mr. Moffat seen 'Rodney's glory' he would have felt himself on surer ground.

Shield's claim to be the composer of 'The Arethusa' has long since been exploded; he merely introduced the Irish melody into his 'Lock and Key' (libretto by Prince Hoare), which was produced on February 6, 1796. Parke, however, says that Incledon sang it in 'Netley Abbey,' performed at Covent Garden on April 22, 1794. But be that as it may, the air was composed seventy years prior to the production of either musical play.

Mr. Kidson, in the new edition of Grove's 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians' (vol. v., p. 606), endeavours to make out that the melody is English, but his reasoning is by no means convincing, and he has not examined the Irish sources. Turloch O'Carolan was the composer, and the air may be dated as from the year 1725. It passed over to England in 1728 or 1729, and was printed in 1730 or 1731. So popular was O'Carolan's song that another Irish poet, Father William English, O.S.A., wrote a second Irish lyric to the same melody in 1740. O'Neill, the Irish harper, took down a traditional setting of it in 1780, which was subsequently published by Bunting. It is here sufficient to add the opinion of Dr. Ernest Walker in his 'History of Music in England' (p. 334): 'O'Carolan, a famous itinerant harper (1670-1738), wrote many of the best-known Irish melodies, including the fine "Princess Royal" dance-tune, that has often been attributed to Shield, having (under the title of "The Arethusa") been transferred to one of the latter's ballad operas, along with other alien matter, according, as we have already seen, to the general custom of the time.'

3. 'To Rodney we will go' has been regarded as an English sea-song, wedded to an English air, but the air is distinctly Irish. In the 'Proceedings of the Musical Association' (1907-8), Mr. Kidson, in the course of an interesting paper, claimed the melody as English, and stated that its first appearance as an Irish air was in Moore's 'Irish Melodies,' in 1813. He also added that it probably dated from 1760, and was printed in 1785.

As to the song I am strongly of opinion that it was not written until 1782, or 1783, after Rodney's memorable victory over De Grasse. Already it has been seen that an Irish poet wrote the song of 'Rodney's glory' in 1782, and it is most probable that 'To Rodney we will go' was written shortly afterwards. Anyhow, it is certain that the melody, under this title, was not printed until the year 1788, when Aird published it in the third volume of his 'Selection.' Mr. Kidson himself, in the new edition of 'Grove,' gives the date 1788 for the publication of Aird's third volume, and I have corroborated it from an examination of the work in the National Library, Dublin.

The Irish melody thus published by Aird in 1788 and adapted to an English song, was known by a variety of names in Ireland. Moore knew it in 1790 as 'Moll Roon' (recte 'Moll a ruin'), and it was under this title that he set his beautiful lyric 'Farewell, but whenever.' Another name was 'The Drop of Dram,' and with this title it appeared in O'Farrell's 'Pocket Companion' in 1810. However, I have much pleasure in here printing for the first time a much earlier setting of the Irish tune—a setting which was popular in Ireland as far back as the year 1754. It was really a hornpipe, and was known as 'Hussey's Maggot,' composed by an Irish gentleman-piper named Hussey about the year 1750. The tune will be found in a unique music-book of the year 1773, now in the Joly Collection, National Library of Ireland. This little volume is labelled 'John Templeton's MS., 1773,' and it formerly belonged to John Templeton, a Dublin merchant, in the second half of the 18th century. The air is as follows:

There is no question but that the above air is that to which 'To Rodney we will go' was set, but for purposes of comparison I herewith subjoin the latter melody as printed in Aird's 'Selection,' vol. iii., p. 160:

TO RODNEY WE WILL GO.

Moore's version, in a slightly varied form, appeared in 1813, and Lover used the melody, changing the rhythm to 6-4 instead of duple, for his lyric 'The low-back'd car' in 1840.

In conclusion it is to be hoped that future editors of English sea-songs will have the grace to admit the Irish provenance of the three melodies here dealt with.

THE NEW CATHEDRAL PSALTER CHANTS.

It would seem that the possibilities of chant-writing must long ago have been exhausted, and that anything like a new chant, if kept within the limits of accepted forms, has yet to be written. We remember having seen a book, the compilation of which cost no little trouble, which had for its object the tabulation of the component parts of chants; but we were unprepared, though allowing for the great number of existing chants, to find so many repetitions of the same phrase, in some cases accompanied by the same harmonies. The editors of the New Cathedral Psalter Chants may well have wondered at the many ingenious examples submitted to them which successfully evaded an idiom made wearisome by familiar repetition. The three books before us have been compiled severally by Sir George Martin, who is responsible for the St. Paul's Cathedral Chant Book; by Dr. Charles Harford Lloyd, who produces the chant book for Parish Church use; and by Mr. Charles Macpherson, whose collection is intended for the use of village churches. The question of pitch on the reciting-note has been considered in the two last, Dr. Lloyd having taken D as the highest reciting-note, while Mr. Macpherson has decided upon C for the same purpose. Care has been taken to include in each of the three books a representative list of well-known chants, to which has been added a large number of specially-written examples by eminent composers. Many of these are admirable in design and suitable to the Psalms for which they are intended. In some cases an alternative setting is given, as in the St. Paul's book, where, for the 11th evening, the two adaptations by Sir John Stainer may still by some quite possibly be preferred as being old favourites. We are glad to find a predominant number of double chants in each book, for, as we remarked in our previous issue, the single chant is monotonous, and intrinsically scanty in design and material. There are also, fortunately, no triple chants. The editors were well advised, however, in giving in each book Sir Herbert Oakeley's quadruple setting for the 15th evening as an alternative arrangement.

There are several special settings which call for more than ordinary notice, viz., those for the 28th evening by Sir John Stainer, Dr. C. H. Lloyd and

Mr. Charles Macpherson, and that for the 31st evening by Sir Charles Stanford. In those by Sir John Stainer and Dr. Lloyd, the happiest use is made of an extra bar. Sir George Martin's chant for the 150th Psalm should, with its rising passage of semitones for the trebles, prove exceedingly fine in effect.

An important addition is made to each book in the form of settings for the Canticles, thus obviating the difficulty of choosing at random from the Psalm chants.

The editors deserve the thanks of that world-wide communion which finds in Anglican psalmody a sympathetic and plastic vehicle in which to render the great scriptural songs of the Church.

Church and Organ Music.

In our last number we promised a detailed notice of an important addition to our modern organ music entitled 'Chaconne and Fugue Trilogy with Choral.' The composer, Sigfrid Karg-Elert, has given many proofs of high and original musicianship, and we naturally expect much of him as one of the advanced school of composers who find the organ a satisfactory medium for their inspiration. The work before us, it may at once be said, is laid out upon unusually broad lines, which combine the necessity of an organ of ample dimensions with the skill of an organist possessing keen musical perception and an impregnable technique. The Royal Academy and the Royal College of Music and other institutions are turning out young men for whom technical difficulties seem to have no terrors, and we commend to their notice this work as one that may well command their respect, though we are prepared to hear it played from memory before long. We have spent several hours in 'listening with our eyes' to one of the most difficult pieces for the organ we have yet encountered, with, we must admit, moderate success. We have before remarked that composers of serious organ music are accused of over-production of fugues or works of similar severe construction. The title of Karg-Elert's work shows, of course, that he has employed that form. But the elaborate processes used by him obviate to a great extent the dryness which often does (though it should not) pervade the pages of many a fugue we wot of. The three sections of which the work is constructed follow the order indicated by the title.

A few bars ff serve as preface, when the Chaconne immediately follows. It is in 6-8 time, and, as was so often characteristic of the Chaconne, consists really of a set of variations on a 'ground bass.' The old dance, now of course obsolete, was founded on a bass of eight bars in 3-4 time. Karg-Elert writes in 6-8 time, and gives four bars, thus equalising matters. In passing, the resemblance of this form to the Passacaglia may be noted, though one of several differences lies in the latter beginning on the weak accent, as in Bach's great example. Upon this ground bass:

No. 1. Larghetto. ♩ = 72.

we have a first set of ten variations, a decided change of stops being indicated for each. A brilliant passage for hands alone passes on to an elaborated series of arpeggios, which lead to a fresh set of variations, the tempo of each gradually becoming slower with diminishing tone as a contrast to the first set. The first of the second series is worth quoting:

and may be considered one of the more simple of the twenty-four which form this section! The following variation should prove effective:

Several variations following this retreat more and more by diminished sound and slower pace, when a grand climax is reached by the opposite process and by a consummate mastery of elaborate notation. This section concludes in B flat major fff.

The Fugue follows at once, the subject being:

The unusual answer is no doubt demanded by the arpeggio form of the subject.

Of very great difficulty and elaborate design, both of material and episode, the work proceeds until the following development appears :

No. 5.

Ped.

Much elaboration follows, and after a dominant and tonic pedal the section ends in B flat major. A new subject is now stated, commencing :

No. 6. Sev. 8.

and leads to passages of enormous difficulty, and after great development we come to a combined entry of the two fugue-subjects (the second by inversion and in the major key), and the ground bass of the Chaconne (expressed in a quaver-figure). Devices of all sorts abound in the pages which follow, including examples of triple counterpoint, points of imitation, &c., and after a brilliant peroration of colossal technical difficulty, the Chorale commencing :

No. 7. Quasi maestoso.

is given in full, alternating with the periods of which are statements of the second fugue subject, inverted and in the major key. The first phrase of the Chorale, it will be seen, serves as the germ of the first section of the fugue. The work concludes with massive and pompous harmonies in which freedom from academic rule is indulged to the fullest extent, which is illustrated by :

No. 8.

The composer gives an alternative version of the climax of the work, by adding parts for brass and drums for the choral portion, and the pedal passage leading up to it.

Whether the extraordinary elaboration of the work as a whole will produce a clear and comprehensive result we dare not say, for we have memories of unwary criticism at which we smile to-day, which warn us to 'wait and see.' A well-known musician (learned in his day) said of 'Lohengrin' such scathing things that, had his word become law, the beautiful work would have perished long ago. Sufficient, we think, has been said to show that Karg-Elert has produced a work which in any case must be considered a remarkable achievement, and organists may well rejoice to see their instrument employed by so consummate a master of contrapuntal device and appreciation of the varied tone-colour and mechanical perfection of the modern organ.

SPECIAL SERVICES.

The Cathedral choirs of Chichester, Salisbury and Winchester held their festival at Winchester on Tuesday, September 27, when the whole of the music was selected from the works of Dr. S. S. Wesley, who, it will be remembered, was organist of the Cathedral from 1849 to 1865. The following works were played upon the organ before service (at 3 o'clock): Andante cantabile in G, Andante in E flat, Air with variations in F sharp minor (Dr. William Prendergast, organist of the Cathedral), Choral song and fugue (Mr. F. J. W. Crowe, organist of Chichester Cathedral), and the Andante in E flat in 4-4 time (Mr. H. R. Eady, assistant-organist of Winchester Cathedral). Upon the arrival of the choirs in their places the anthem 'O Lord, my God' was sung. The Responses were taken to Tallis's festal setting. The Magnificat and Nunc dimittis were Dr. Wesley's fine setting in E. The anthems selected were 'All go unto one place,' 'Ascribe unto the Lord,' 'Wash me thoroughly,' and 'The Wilderness.' The offertory was taken before the two last-named, Mr. C. F. South (organist of Salisbury Cathedral) meanwhile playing the Andante in G (3-4 time.) The solo parts of the Magnificat and the anthems were most ably sung by Messrs. Clements and Elsmore (altos), Boorman and Cross (tenors), and Messrs. Tyack and Whitwam (basses), all of the Winchester choir, while the solo singing of the Winchester Cathedral boys was a remarkable feature of the service, which concluded with Dr. Wesley's variations on the National Anthem, most ably played by Mr. H. R. Eady.

Dr. Prendergast accompanied the whole of the choral portion of the service, with the exception of the first anthem, which was unaccompanied, and the fact that he was able to do so instead of conducting, says very much for the admirable training the choirs had received. He deserves the thanks of all for having prepared so fine a service.

A Wesley commemoration service was held in St. Matthew's Church, St. Leonard's-on-Sea, on October 13, and was attended by a large congregation. The music was, of course, selected—excepting a chant by Turle—from the works of Dr. Wesley, and included the anthems 'Let us lift up our heart,' 'O Lord, my God,' 'Ascribe unto the Lord' and 'Blessed be the God and Father.' The verse parts were well sung by the Misses Edythe Thompson, Mabel Upjohn, Pritchard, and May Bennie; Messrs. F. L. Dowell, R. Schafer, H. Richardson and F. Pillings. The tune 'Aurelia' was restored to the place for which it was written, being sung to the hymns 'Jerusalem the golden' and 'Brief life is here our portion.' An impressive sermon was preached by the Lord Bishop of Chichester, who claimed for the composer that he was essentially English, and his music Anglican. Mr. Henry G. Baily, organist of the church, conducted the augmented choir with skill and resource, while the important duties of organist were admirably fulfilled by Mr. Harry Goss Custard, organist of St. Saviour's, Ealing, who played before the service 'Holsworth church bells' and an Andante, and after Sir Frederick Bridge's four-fold Amen (adapted from Wesley) had been sung, the Choral Song and Fugue as a concluding voluntary.

A musical service was given at Portsmouth Parish Church on Sunday, October 2, when the music was selected from Dr. S. S. Wesley's works. The anthems 'The Wilderness' and 'Blessed be the God and Father' were included, as was the bass solo 'For our heart shall rejoice' (from 'O Lord, Thou art my God'). The organ volunaries were the Choral song and fugue, Andante cantabile in G, Theme varied (in F sharp minor), and the 'Holsworthy church bells.' The whole was under the direction of Mr. R. H. Turner, organist of the church.

A Wesley memorial service, arranged by the Winchester and District Organists' Association, was given at St. Thomas's, Winchester, on October 13. Four of Wesley's anthems were sung—'Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace,' 'The Wilderness,' 'Wash me thoroughly,' and 'Ascribe unto the Lord.' The organists were Dr. Sweeting, master of music at Winchester College, and Mr. E. W. Savage.

Special services were held at the Kensal Rise Wesleyan Church on October 2, when Smart's Te Deum in F and Mozart's motet, 'O God, when Thou appearest,' were given with orchestral accompaniment. The choir also sang Sullivan's 'O gladsome Light,' Gounod's 'Send out Thy Light,' and H. A. Chambers's 'Lord, we pray Thee.' The orchestra played separate numbers, and Mr. H. A. Chambers contributed Handel's first Organ Concerto. Mr. Charles E. Ransom conducted.

A performance of Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of praise' was given at the Wesleyan Church, Sydenham, on October 9, by a choir of sixty voices, accompanied by the organ, strings and timpani. The soloists were Mrs. A. W. Beck, Miss Florence Jenner, and Mr. William Naylor. Mr. Edwin Jenner, the organist and choirmaster of the church, conducted, and Dr. Frank N. Abernethy presided at the organ.

HARVEST FESTIVAL SERVICES.

At Broomwood Wesleyan Church, Clapham Common, harvest festival services were held on September 24, and at the evening service Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' was sung by the choir with organ accompaniment (Mr. Allan H. Brown), under the conductorship of Mr. G. Harold Paine. The solo parts were sung by Miss H. M. Sampson and Mr. Vivian Bennetts.

On Sunday, October 2, a harvest festival was held at the Parish Church, Toxteth Park, Liverpool, when Dr. Garrett's 'Harvest cantata' was sung after evensong, under the direction of Mr. Ernest H. Smith, the organist of the church.

The harvest festival at Sutton Wesleyan Church was held on Sunday, October 2, when Mendelssohn's beautiful cantata 'Lauda Sion' was well rendered, under the direction of Mr. R. V. Seddon, organist and choirmaster.

Garrett's 'Harvest Cantata' was given at Holy Trinity Church, Sunningdale, on Sunday, October 16, under the direction of Mr. R. Barrett-Watson, organist and director of the choir. The soloists were Miss Lilian Dillingham and Mr. C. O. Goodchild.

A harvest festival performance of Gaul's 'Ruth' was given at Harrington Congregational Church on October 10, under the direction of Mr. Charles Rowley. Mr. Harry E. King was the organist.

Gaul's pastoral cantata 'Ruth' was performed with highly creditable effect at East Queen Street Baptist Chapel on September 7. The artists were Miss Gertrude Grenfell, Miss Helen Reinke, Miss Florence Walker and Mr. G. V. Brandon. Mr. S. M. Kitchen conducted, and Mr. G. D. Goode officiated at the organ. 'Ellis's Orchestra' also took part. The performance was repeated by request on September 21.

The harvest festival at St. Luke's Church, Mayfield Road, Horney, was held on Thursday, October 13, when Parts 1 and 2 of Haydn's 'Creation' were sung by a largely augmented choir accompanied by an orchestra. The soloists were Miss Mudge Budge, Mr. George Foxon and Mr. Sidney Graves. Mr. H. J. Baggs was the organist, and Mr. Henry S. Plummer conducted. There was a large congregation.

A harvest festival service was held on October 20, at Chichester Cathedral, by the Cathedral Oratorio Society, under the direction of Mr. F. J. W. Crowe, whose usual place at the organ was taken by Mr. E. Stephenson. The chief work was Weber's 'Jubilee Cantata.' An orchestra assisted, and played Brahms's second Symphony.

An organ was recently built by Mr. Alfred Kirkland for the Bishop of St. Albans residence, Verulam House, St. Albans, and was opened on Saturday, October 8, by Dr. E. Markham Lee. The organ was the gift of a number of friends at Woodford, as a memento of the Bishop's stay there, 1903-10.

A series of organ recitals has been given during the past month at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey by Mr. Herbert Hodge, organist and choirmaster of the church.

Reviews.

Music in the Church. By Peter Christian Lutkin, Mus. Doc. [The Young Churchman Company.]

We have read this book with much interest and not a little profit. Consisting, as it does, of the papers read by Dr. Lutkin as Hale lecturer for 1908-9, each chapter (if we may so call each section) consists of a complete lecture, printed exactly as it was delivered. The author has necessarily covered much ground, seeing that the six sections of the work embrace the following subjects in order: Hymn tunes—Congregational singing—The organ—The organist and choir-master—The vested male choir—The development of music in the Anglican church. In regard to the first-named, the author claims that plain-song is increasing in popularity, and takes as evidence the fact that in the 1910 edition of 'Hymns Ancient and Modern' no fewer than seventy plain-song hymns are included, or more than three times as many as in the 1861 edition. We refuse to believe the supply was created by the demand, and can only say that an experience of thirty years shows us that these plain-song tunes are not as a rule popular. But many historical facts relating to the evolution of the hymn-tune make the lecture interesting reading. It is strange that our friends over the water usually stop short, as does Dr. Lutkin, at a few names as representing the climax of all that has gone to make our English church music what it is. We could add half-a-dozen names to his list of hymn-tune writers, and hope in a later edition these may be included. The vexed question of congregational singing is well treated, though the difficulty still remains unsolved as to whether the service should be 'hearty,' or whether the choir should have the monopoly of the music other than the hymns. Such a sentence as 'the people are to take part in the responses, psalms and hymns, but are only to worship negatively while the choir sings the more elaborate music of the service,' seems to us to point to a true solution, if we go further and deprive the congregation of their doubtful assistance in the psalms. If it is (as the author fears some think) 'praising God by proxy,' is that worse than 'praying to God by proxy'? We think not. This is a very old question, and probably there is nothing fresh to be said upon it. An admirable paper on the organ, with regard to its history and construction, shows the author's wide knowledge of the subject, while on 'The organist and choirmaster' and the 'Vested male choir' (peculiar to America, we believe) there is much that is both instructive and useful. The lecture on 'The development of music in the Anglican church' is admirably written, and in a short space we have a clear insight into the manner in which our church music has attained its present power. We should have expected the name of Dr. Garrett, at least, to have been mentioned. His settings of the Service entitle him to wide recognition. There are a few misprints. The organ at Southwark Cathedral is by T. C. Lewis, and the date of John E. West's birth is somewhat later than 1683! The lectures are an undoubted gain to the literature of church music, and we are glad to see them in book form.

In the morning. A rhapsody for chorus and orchestra. Words by Ernest Bilton. Music by Stafford North.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

There are many qualities in 'Stafford North's' 'In the morning' that will commend the work to choral societies. Its motto, 'Sorrow may endure for the night, but joy cometh in the morning,' indicates the theme of Ernest Bilton's poem and the type of contrast that defines the form and style of the composer's music. The sorrow depicted by the composer is devoid of discontent or over-much brooding, and does not exclude effects of musical interest and beauty. The joy of morning is conveyed in dignified terms that provide a stately conclusion. The choral writing need deter no society on the score of difficulty. The instrumental accompaniment, moreover, is not involved. The style of the music can be described, without disparagement, as late-Victorian. Its character reveals an earnest mind and sound musicianship.

PIANOFORTE MUSIC.

Tone-stanzas, from a musical calendar. By Ernest Austin. [J. H. Larway.]

At a time when the art of writing light and artistic music for the pianoforte seems at a low ebb, it is gratifying to find some evidence to the contrary, such as is embodied in this collection of pieces from the pen of Mr. Austin. The general description 'from a musical calendar' is not carried further by the use of calendrical titles to the individual pieces, which are merely numbered 1 to 8. The first is perhaps the most charming: it owes much to simple construction and light texture. The avoidance of unnecessary notes is a characteristic of the series as a whole. No. 2 is a delicate, rippling little piece full of clever ideas. No. 3 recalls the spirit of the old Minuet. No. 4 is inspired by the spirit of mischief: it was thoughtful of the composer to make special mention that its key is A flat. Nos. 5 and 6 have less distinction. No. 7 is what appears to be a bid for popularity in the shape of a melody in places sentimental and commonplace; it is published in four forms as adapted to the needs of pianists, organists, violinists and violoncellists. No. 8 has possibilities of effect. Although there are passages of music in this collection that are less acceptable than others, the merits weigh most heavily in the balance and afford material for satisfaction.

PART-SONGS FOR FEMALE VOICES.

The earth and man. A song of morning. The rhyme of the four birds. By A. C. Mackenzie.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

The modern conception of the part-song which composers and choral societies, acting and re-acting upon each other, have evolved, differs vastly from that which was current at the beginning of the century, as few will need to be told. The change was at first manifested chiefly in the output of compositions for mixed-voices and male-voices, and it is only recently that music for female-voices has been largely influenced by the new ideas. A notable addition to this category, in which the new style of expression has been adopted without reserve, has now been made in the form of the above trios by Sir Alexander Mackenzie. It must be emphasised that these works do not embody the least satisfactory feature of modern choral writing, namely, the tendency to ignore the limitations of the human brain and voice and write unsingable successions of notes. In the vocal suitability of their part-writing these trios reproduce what was best in the older style. They are all supplied with pianoforte accompaniment.

'The earth and man' is a melodious setting of verses by Stopford Brooke, shaped so as to give expression to the words and not as a squarely constructed tune. It modulates freely, but without abrupt transitions, and the interest is maintained at a high pitch by the artistic decoration and occasional silence of the accompaniment.

The words of 'A song of morning' are by Ethel Clifford. The setting has all the merits described above, and in addition a serious philosophical mood. The modulations again are far-reaching, but smooth. The accompaniment and voice-parts are singularly independent, and the whole piece moves forward with almost symphonic continuity from beginning to end.

The 'Rhyme of the four birds' is more fanciful as regards both the words—which are by Dorothea Mapleson—and the music. It is enlivened by semiquaver figures in the accompaniment, which has the characteristic independence. In the hands of a well-trained body of singers it is capable of producing some novel and beautiful effects.

H.M.S. Pinafore (Gilbert and Sullivan). Arranged for children's voices by Dr. W. G. McNaught.

[Metzler & Co.]

This publication should be welcome to schools and junior choirs. No other operetta has enjoyed such wide popularity. The new arrangement is made to fit the existing pianoforte score and band parts. It includes only the vocal parts, which are given in both notations.

THE STUDY OF RHYTHM.

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

SIR,—I am glad to find by Dr. Yorke Trotter's article in the last issue of the Musical Times, that English musicians are beginning to see that rhythm means something more than the elementary idea of 'counting the time.' Miss Glyn has done valuable service by calling attention to the æsthetic importance of rhythm, and it now remains to put the study on a practical basis that can be of use to students.

I notice that Dr. Trotter still adheres to the old view that we must refer to the bar as a rhythmical unit; but so long ago as 1787 the ambiguity of the bar and time-signature was pointed out by Koch in his 'Anleitung zur Composition,' and what he said still holds good.

The remarkable development of the science of rhythm that is going on abroad with such excellent practical results had its origin in Westphal's 'Allgemeine Theorie der musikalischen Rhythmik,' which appeared in 1883. Westphal and his successors, as is well known, were inspired by the Aristoxenian theory of rhythm, which has been found applicable to every branch of modern music, and I am afraid Dr. Trotter is mistaken in what he says about the Greeks. Far from relying on mathematical accuracy, Aristoxenus continually refers to the necessity of an appeal to the aisthēsis, the 'feeling,' as the only test, and insists that any 'proportion' that does not make this appeal must be rejected.

The word 'rhythm,' like the word 'tone' and some other musical terms, is used in a variety of senses, and it has hitherto been found impossible to invent an entirely satisfactory definition for it. I have noticed that other musicians besides Dr. Trotter dislike the use of the expression 'a rhythm' as indicating a musical section, yet since Aristoxenus, the founder of rhythmical æsthetic science, constantly uses it in this sense, we are certainly justified in doing so in common with the German and French writers.

The chief difficulty in bringing the Continental theory before English musicians seems to be that of technical terms. The English language cannot supply them all, and we must have recourse to Greek. Our musicians use Greek words every day of their lives in 'harmony,' 'melody,' 'chord,' 'orchestra,' 'chorus,' 'chromatic,' 'diatonic,' 'period,' and dozens of others that might be cited, but it would be perhaps difficult for them to assimilate the equally important technical terms of rhythm. Yet without a technical vocabulary how can a science be studied?—Yours faithfully,

C. F. ABDY WILLIAMS.

THE TEMPO OF 'O REST IN THE LORD.'

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

SIR,—I think all will agree with Mr. D. W. Rootham—the words touch some of the tenderest chords of the human heart.' Truly, and therefore let us not applaud a contralto because she plays on those chords to such an extent as to ruin Mendelssohn's music. I think some at least of our singers to-day forget that Mendelssohn knew he was setting Old Testament words in an oratorio having Elijah and not Christ or St. Paul for its subject. Had Mendelssohn set some such words as 'O rest in the Lord thy God' or 'the Lord God of Abraham,' many people would have opened their eyes to the fact that 'O rest in the Lord' is not 'O rest in the Lord Jesus!' Sung and played away from the oratorio, as this number frequently is, has given it a New Testament character and association, of which, perhaps, the composer little dreamt, hence the more tender tempo of to-day.

The late Mr. F. G. Edwards's 'History of Mendelssohn's Elijah' contains a letter of Mendelssohn's (from Leipzig, July 28, 1846) in which he says: 'Here are the metronomes, which I beg you will give the director of the choruses; but tell him that I cannot promise they will be exactly the same, but nearly so, I think.' So the composer already felt some latitude would have to be allowed even him; but all the same, his 'nearly so' is not 'slower still,' and it is well known that as a conductor Mendelssohn never dragged the time.

In reading Mr. D. W. Rootham's letter in your October number, I wondered whether he had ever noticed Sir Charles V. Stanford's letter in the Musical Times for January, 1902, copied from the Times of December 7, 1901, on the tempi of Mendelssohn in 'Elijah.' I quote the following: 'The most striking modern lapses are in the contralto airs "Woe unto them" and (especially) "O rest in the Lord." The latter air was sung in 1846 by Miss Williams [F. G. Edwards, in a footnote, corrects this to Miss M. B. Hawes], who afterwards married Mr. Lockey. He told me that Mendelssohn impressed upon her the importance of singing this song quite simply and without dragging. It is now frequently reduced to nearly half speed.' Let us have the music as the composer intended it—with intelligence, and not sentimentality.—Yours faithfully, OLIVER E. FLEET-COBB.

Obituary.

We regret to have to report the following deaths:

MR. WALTER WESCHÉ, on September 26. He was born in 1857, at Colombo, came to England at an early age, and studied the pianoforte under Mr. Oscar Beringer, in whose School he afterwards became professor of harmony. He also taught the pianoforte at the Royal Normal College for the Blind. His organ appointments included St. Thomas's, Westbourne Grove, and St. Stephen's, South Hampstead. As a composer, trained by Berthold Tours and Dr. Frederic H. Cowen, he won prizes offered by the Westminster Orchestral Society and the Musicians' Company. He was an associate of the Philharmonic Society.

MR. JOHN CHESHIRE, the English harpist, who died at the age of seventy-three, on September 21, at New York. He was a pupil of Balsir Chatterton at the Royal Academy of Music, and became a teacher at the same institution. He was for many years associated as solo harpist with the orchestras conducted by the late Anton Seidl, and obtained much success as a solo and orchestral player both here and in America. The deceased was also a prolific composer for his instrument.

HERR ADOLF ANDRÉ, one of the proprietors of the well-known firm of music publishers, Johann André, at Offenbach, who passed away at Offenbach on September 10 in his fifty-seventh year.

MR. HENRY POPE GUY, on October 11, at Brixton, aged sixty-four. He was a tenor singer, and was trained at the Royal Academy of Music. He was formerly a member of the Chapel Royal choir.

ELIZABETH FANNY HENRIETTA ('Lili') WACH, who was the youngest and only surviving daughter of Mendelssohn, on October 15, at the age of sixty-five.

MR. REGINALD BROPHY, leading tenor at Westminster Cathedral, aged thirty-five.

MUSIC AT THE CHURCH CONGRESS.

Music had a full share of attention at the Church Congress held at Cambridge during the last week of September. On September 28, Dr. W. H. Hadow gave an address on English Church Music, which was illustrated by the performance of anthems by the choir of St. John's College (under Dr. Rootham), and Trinity College (under Dr. Gray). Dr. Hadow, before an audience of about 1,000 persons, gave a succinct but comprehensive survey of the development of Church music from the middle of the 16th century until about the end of the 19th century. The address was delivered almost without reference to notes. As the official summary reached us as we were going to press, we have been compelled to hold over our report until next month. During the week the choirs of King's (under Dr. Mann) and the two colleges above-mentioned sang at their services some of the finest exemplifications of music composed for the Church. At St. John's and at Trinity, the music was given in chronological order, and embraced compositions by Farrant, Byrd, Gibbon, Purcell, Kelway, Boyce, Travers, Battishill, Walmisley, and S. S. Wesley.

THE CARDIFF FESTIVAL.

SUPPLEMENTARY NOTICE.

'With the wild geese,' the title of Mr. Hamilton Harty's tone-poem, produced on September 23, may seem a curious one to those who neither know Irish history nor the poems of Miss Emily Lawless. Those who know one or the other (the poems are a good introduction to the history), will remember however that the wild geese were the band of patriots who, exiled from their country after the battle of Aughrim, took service in France and perished at Fontenoy. One must know more than the history books tell to trace their story further; but one may learn from the peasants of the West of Ireland, or from Miss Lawless's poems, or from Mr. Harty's music, how the brave spirits came:

' . . . Singing from the fight,
Home to Corca Bascinn in the morning light.'

By all three it is told with a simplicity of expression which gives the legend the ring of truth. That is the chief feature of Mr. Harty's music, one which makes it really belong to his country, and marks it apart from all that false sentiment about Ireland which Mr. Bernard Shaw tears to tatters in the first act of 'John Bull's other Island.' There is no attempt to create an atmosphere such as that with which the incorrigible Briton loves to envelop his 'other Island.' All the music is made up of clean, fresh melodies, placed in a strong light by means of perfectly simple orchestration, and there is no feeling that the composer has had to make a greater effort of the imagination in order to picture to himself and his audience the joyous home-coming of the heroic spirits, than was necessary in order to call up the battle-scene at Fontenoy. Indeed the former, with which of course the work ends, seems to be the more real to him. The work, in four sections, begins with a trumpet call, introducing a buoyant Allegro founded on themes which recall the lighter side of Irish folk-music, and suggest the spirit of daring which throbbed in the veins of the patriots. Then comes a tender and reflective slow movement, picturing the dreams and aspirations of the exiles; this is followed by the battle of Fontenoy, which, if less spontaneous than the rest of the work, at least avoids the temptation to indulge in sensational realism. The last picture, the return of the wild geese singing upon the waves, springs out of a beautiful passage for the strings in rapid triplets, and the short movement increases in ardour and brilliancy. Thus the composer 'weaves the strands of patriotism and death' till they culminate in a pean of joy.

THE LEEDS FESTIVAL.

The fourteenth musical festival held in this great town took place on October 12, 13, 14 and 15. In artistic results it will compare favourably with any of its predecessors. The programme presented very few novelties and a cosmopolitan selection of well-tryed works, some of which were no doubt included as a concession to the tastes of many supporters of the festival without whose sympathies the event could not take place at all. They pay the piper and claim the right to call the tune. So we had, for big choral works, 'Elijah' to begin the festival, Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion on the last day, and Brahms's German Requiem in between. An attractive and very popular feature was the appearance of Rachmaninoff as solo pianist, symphonic composer and conductor. The most important novelty was Dr. R. Vaughan Williams's 'Sea Symphony,' and the only other novelty was Sir Charles Stanford's 'Songs of the Fleet.' The vocal soloists—all British—were as follows: Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Perceval Allen, Madame Gleeson-White, Madame Clara Butt, Madame Ada Crossley, Miss Dils Jones, Mr. Gervase Elwes, Mr. William Green, Mr. Walter Hyde, Mr. Plunket Greene, Mr. Herbert Brown, Mr. Campbell McInnes, Mr. Robert Radford, and Mr. Kennerley Rumford. The band consisted of 128 performers: 40 violins, 12 violas, 12 violoncellos, 12 double-basses, 8 flutes (four extra being for Bach), 2 piccolos, 8 oboes (four of which for Bach only), Cor Anglais, 5 clarinets, 5 bassoons, 8 horns, 3 trumpets, 5 trombones, 1 tuba, 2 harps and 3 percussion instrument players. Mr. Frye Parker was the leader. The magnificence of this great orchestra was sometimes overpowering. Even the tone of the splendid chorus was sometimes killed. The choir was selected chiefly from Leeds chorists, but it included contingents from neighbouring towns: Huddersfield, Bradford, Dewsbury, &c. It was balanced as follows: Sopranos 104, contraltos 92, tenors 72, basses 80: total 348. Mr. H. A. Fricker (City organist) was the chorus-master, and a very able one he proved to be. Dr. Edward C. Bairstow was organist, and Dr. Walford Davies was at the pianoforte in Handel's 'Ode on St. Cecilia's Day' and Bach's Passion music. Sir Charles Stanford conducted, this being the fourth festival under his régime.

It will be seen from the above that the resources were powerful. It is questionable whether so many performers were called for. The town hall in which the concerts were given is not so large that 250 chorists (especially Yorkshire chorists) and a band of about 100 would not have been otherwise than sufficiently sonorous for the most modern music. Sometimes one could not hear the music because of the sound—it was simply an unanalysable, seething, thunderous sea. One is almost tempted to imagine that modern audiences must suffer from deafness, inasmuch as some modern music finds it necessary to make this almost frantic appeal for a hearing. While mentioning audiences, it may be interesting to record that at Leeds, as at most of the musical festivals, the feminine sex formed the great bulk of the audience. At the daytime concerts there were at least twelve ladies to one man, and the proportion at evening concert was nearly the same.

'Elijah' was the first work performed. It served chiefly to satisfy the desires of the subscribers, and to demonstrate the splendour of the choir. The tone was unusually resonant and blunderful, and the attack, if never thrilling, was always good, and gave evidence of skilful training. We deal elsewhere with some purely statistical features of the performance. Miss Nicholls was at her best, Madame Clara Butt was the contralto (she made a curious slip in 'O rest in the Lord'), Mr. William Green's beautiful voice was heard to the best advantage in the tenor solos, and Mr. Herbert Brown took the title-part and put into it his great temperament. The double quartet was not at all well sung by eight local singers, and 'O come, everyone that thirsteth' was also similarly defective.

The most important novelty of the festival was produced on the evening of the 12th. This was Dr. R. Vaughan Williams's 'Sea Symphony' for soprano and baritone soli, chorus and orchestra. It is a serious art work that may be regarded as the latest expression of musical feeling of one of the ablest and most profound of our existing English composers. The Symphony deserves its title, because in the general form and relation of its four movements it has some relation to the classic symphonic plan. The words are by Walt Whitman, a poet whose remarkable imaginativeness inspired the composer's previous Leeds festival work, 'Towards the Unknown Region.' In the 'Sea Symphony' there is no plot, or story to tell; it gives expression only to the moods suggested by the sea—its immensity, its waywardness, and grandeur. The first section is entitled 'A song for all seas, all ships':

'Flaunt out O sea your separate flags of nations!
Flaunt out visible as ever the various ship-signals!
But do you reserve especially for yourself and for the soul of man one flag above all the rest,
A spiritual woven signal for all nations, emblem of man
elate above death,
Token of all brave captains and all intrepid sailors and mates,
And all that went down doing their duty,
Reminiscent of them, twined from all intrepid captains young or old,
A pennant universal, subtly waving all time, o'er all brave sailors,
All seas, all ships.'

The second section, 'On the beach at night alone,' has beautiful words, and the composer is at his best in providing impressive music:

'On the beach at night alone,
As the old mother sways her to and fro singing her husky song,
As I watch the bright stars shining, I think a thought of the clef of the universes and of the future.'

The third movement (Scherzo) is called 'The waves':

'Waves of the ocean bubbling and gurgling, blithely prying,
Waves, undulating waves, liquid, uneven, emulous waves.'

Here the composer found scope for the indulgence of much charming fancifulness. The movement is one that would be very attractive as a separate item. The vocal parts being for chorus only, it may be hoped that it will have wide use. The last movement is called 'The Explorers,' and here the poet finds his deepest expression:

'Thoughts, silent thoughts, of Time and Space and Death, like waters flowing,
Bear me indeed as through the regions infinite.

O my brave soul!
O farther, farther sail!
O daring joy, but safe! are they not all the seas of God?
O farther, farther, farther sail!'

Here, to our mind, the composer has reached the highest point of his inspiration. The music seems so lucid, and the orchestration, though full, is not overpowering. When shall we have another opportunity of hearing this earnest and able work again?

The solo parts were excellently sung by Madame Gleeson-White and Mr. Campbell McInnes. The choir displayed absolute virtuosity in singing their difficult music so fluently and expressively. The composer conducted.

Another item of considerable interest in the programme was the performance of M. Rachmaninoff's Pianoforte concerto in C minor, with the composer at the pianoforte. The work was brought out at a London Philharmonic concert in 1902, when the solo part was played by M. Sapelnikoff. At Leeds it was most charmingly played, and so rapturously received that the composer played as an encore the inevitable prelude. Strauss's 'Don Juan' was the final number of the concert.

On October 13, at the morning concert, Beethoven's 'Egmont' overture fitly heralded Brahms's 'German Requiem.' This great and deeply impressive work was at least adequately performed, but there was no special distinction in the interpretation. The choral portions, with such resources, were often finely sung. The soloists were Madame Gleeson-White (who certainly especially distinguished herself) and Mr. Kennerley Rumford. The programme included Rachmaninoff's Symphony in E minor (Op. 27), which was conducted with great skill by the composer. This fine work was heard in London in May this year, under Nikisch, and made then also a great impression. It is the expression of much deep feeling, and exhibits much masterly musicianship. Two unaccompanied pieces were sung by the choir, Sir Edward Elgar's six-part song 'Go, song of mine,' and Weelkes's madrigal 'As Vesta was descending.' They both had the advantage of being conducted by Mr. H. A. Fricker, who, as stated above, had trained the chorus. No two pieces of alla cappella music could better illustrate the different musical idioms of the period in which they were composed. The choir grappled boldly with the technical difficulties of the Elgar specimen, even though they did not extract all its potentialities in expression, and the performance of the madrigal was something to remember and gave untold pleasure to the audience. Dvorák's overture 'In der Natur,' Op. 91, concluded the concert.

On the evening of October 13 a performance of Handel's 'Ode on St. Cecilia's Day' failed to stir either performers or audience. Miss Nicholls and Mr. Walter Hyde did their best with the solos, and Dr. H. Walford Davies was at the pianoforte. Five 'Songs of the Fleet,' by Sir Charles Stanford, were performed for the first time. They are all written to words by Mr. Harry Newbolt, who wrote the words 'Songs of the sea,' set by Sir Charles, produced at the 1904 festival. The new songs have many good qualities. The third, 'Middle watch,' is one of the best and most poetical, but perhaps the fifth, 'Farewell,' will always be the favourite. Mr. Plunket Greene was the soloist, but he was not in very good voice.

The music to these words has many fine, significant moments, but we cannot help thinking that it is over-scored, and that the climaxes are too often tremendous.

Act 1 of 'Die Walküre' received a splendid interpretation from Miss Nicholls, Mr. Walter Hyde and Mr. Robert Radford. The orchestra played magnificently.

On October 14, Sir Charles Stanford conducted his 'Wellington Ode,' which, it may be remembered, was first heard at the Bristol festival of 1908. On this occasion, as on the former one, the pictorial elements in the work made a strong appeal, and the variety of expression secured by the choir was remarkable, especially in the direction of delicacy and refinement. The soloists, Miss Agnes Nicholls and Mr. Plunket Greene, were the same as at the initial performance. Elgar's 'Variations,' played with great care as to detail and much beauty of tone, and the 'Eroica' Symphony, were the orchestral pieces in the programme, but its outstanding feature was the superb singing of Bach's motet for a double chorus, 'Sing ye to the Lord,' which was conducted by the chorus-master, Mr. Fricker, and produced the chief sensation of the festival. The singers never flagged, but sang with the same brightness and enthusiasm from beginning to end, while the contrasts of tone that were secured were remarkable, especially when the chorale is sung by one choir with a subdued, even tone, and the other choir interrupt with energetic phrases.

At the evening concert on Thursday, Mr. William Wallace secured a most finished performance of his genial and characteristic symphonic poem 'Villon,' and Debussy's 'Blessed Damsel' was given, the orchestra deserving chief credit for the success of the performance. Miss Perceval Allen was hardly suited in the principal part, while Miss Delys Jones was satisfying as the second soprano. Sir Charles Stanford was at his best in Schumann's 'Rhenish' Symphony, which was so charmingly played that we wonder it is so seldom heard, and the concert ended brightly with Mr. Hubert Bath's clever cantata, 'The wedding of Shon Maclean,' the bibulous humours of which might be more enjoyable if it were given on a more modest scale. At any rate its inclusion may be held to vindicate the catholicity of the festival programme, if it did nothing else. At this concert Madame Clara Butt, who was in excellent voice, sang in characteristic style Elgar's charming 'Sea pictures.'

The interest of the festival culminated on Saturday morning, when Bach's 'St. Matthew Passion' was given. Great pains had been taken to ensure an adequate interpretation of this great work, and the result was a deeply impressive performance, emphasising its devotional character. The chief soloists were Mr. Campbell McInnes, who sang the Saviour's words with admirable expression and artistic reticence, Mr. Gervase Elwes, whose clearness of enunciation suited his part as the Narrator, Miss Agnes Nicholls, Madame Ada Crossley and Mr. Radford: an excellent cast, with whom some local singers were associated in minor parts. The 'Continuo' was most artistically interpreted by Dr. Walford Davies at the pianoforte, and Dr. Bairstow's judicious use of the organ deserves note. The chorales were sung as Bach undoubtedly meant them to be, accompanied by orchestra and organ, and as representing the collective voice of the congregation without the minute nuances which give them a personal and rather sentimental feeling, and seem out of place in a concert-performance. Even in the concert-room the proper relationship between the various aspects of the Passion music—the narrative, the dramatic episodes, the reflections of the individual believer and the comments of the congregation of the faithful—should be observed in order to secure the right general impression.

The concluding concert on Saturday evening was marked by an exceedingly happy performance, under Sir Hubert Parry, of his delightful cantata the 'Pied Piper,' which is in the true comedy spirit, and is humorous without descending into farce. The two soloists, Mr. Elwes and Mr. Plunket Greene, contributed to the successful result, and the latter artist also contributed some arrangements of traditional songs to the programme, which included Tchaikovsky's fourth Symphony and a selection from the final scene of 'Die Meistersinger,' Wagner's festive music making a most brilliant finish to the festival.

THE TEMPI OF 'ELIJAH.'

Last month Mr. Daniel Rootham raised the formerly-debated question of the proper Mendelssohn tempi of 'O rest in the Lord,' and another correspondent discusses the question in our present issue. Some years ago, Sir Charles Stanford expressed some opinions on the subject of the tempi of 'Elijah' generally. As he conducted the recent Leeds performance of the work, an arithmetical interest was imparted to his interpretation on this occasion. In many of the numbers the pace was practically that indicated by Mendelssohn, but in others there was a wide divergence. We set out below a detailed account of these variations, which we may claim to have calculated with care. We do not offer these details as criticism, but simply as a record, and as showing to some extent how 'Elijah' appeals to an experienced and eminent musician. Mendelssohn's tempi are given under M., and the Leeds tempi under S.

THE WAGNER ASSOCIATION.

The centenary spirit which has been so active during the present year has naturally induced many to glance ahead and discover what celebrations of the kind the next few years will bring in their train. Of the centenaries that cross the horizon during that period, that of Wagner in 1913 is of course facile princeps. It has been felt that such an occasion should be signalised on a great and worthy scale, and it is with satisfaction that we learn that an authoritative body has been formed, one of whose chief objects is to organize a fitting celebration.

The Wagner Association, inaugurated at its first general meeting on October 3, has for its objects:

1. 'The encouragement and support of the right performance of Wagner's works in England.'
2. 'The gathering together of the admirers of Wagner, and the provision, if possible, of a permanent meeting-place for that purpose.'
3. 'The special celebration of the centenary of Wagner's birth.'

The president is Mr. Louis N. Parker; the vice-president, Mr. Charles Symonds; the hon. secretary, Mr. Basil Crump; the hon. assistant-secretary, Mr. F. A. Richards, 2c, Bickenhall Mansions, Gloucester Place, W.; the hon. treasurer, Mr. Sydney J. Loeb, 4, Lancaster Gate, W. The remaining members of the committee are Mr. A. L. Birnstingl, the Hon. Mrs. Lawrence Brodrick, Mr. J. R. Brotherton, Mr. Charles Dowdeswell, Mr. Eaton Faring, Mr. G. S. Robertson, Lady Trotter, Mr. P. A. Wilkins and the Hon. Henrietta Windsor-Clive.

The subscription for members, of whom there are at present upwards of 200, is five shillings per annum. The list includes the following names:—Mrs. Henry Ainley, The Hon. O. S. Brett, The Hon. Laurence Brodrick, Mr. John S. Churchill, Mrs. Leighton Cleather, Mrs. Frank Dawes, Miss Marion Bertha Detmar, The Earl of Dysart, The Rt. Hon. Sir George Taubman Goldie, Mr. S. H. Hamer, The Countess of Limerick, Miss Matilde H. Richter, Mr. Charles Rube, Sir F. Paolo Tosti, K.C.V.O., Mr. A. Visetti, Freifrau von Oempteda, Lady Wernher, The Rt. Hon. C. B. Stuart-Wortley, K.C., M.P.

The Committee has decided to offer a prize consisting of a complete series of tickets for the last six performances at Bayreuth next summer ('The Ring,' 'Meistersinger' and 'Parsifal') for the best essay on the opera 'Lohengrin.' Competitors must be subscribing members of the Association.

At the first annual general meeting, held on October 3, an address was delivered by the president. He announced that Dr. Hans Richter and Mr. William Ashton Ellis had been elected the first members honoris causa. Of Dr. Richter he spoke in the following terms: 'It is no exaggeration to say that Richter's entrance into English musical life was the beginning of great orchestral playing in this country, and revealed entirely new wonders in old masterpieces. He not only made Wagner's music comprehensible, but he brought into full light all the beauties of the great composers which previously had to a great extent lain only subconsciously suspected. In his own person, moreover, he presented the type of the true Wagnerian: of the artist enflamed with a burning enthusiasm, not for the work of one man only, but for all that is true and great and beautiful in all the arts. The younger generation are perhaps a little apt to take Hans Richter for granted, just as they are apt to take Wagner himself for granted, but I insist that if it had not been for him, music in England—not conducting only, but the whole art of music—might still be wrapped in the magnificent self-sufficiency which made the old British drawing-room ballad and the dear old British choral society cantata the ideals of a vast public. . . . One of Richter's most admirable characteristics is that he has never subordinated the composer to his own personality. He has never used any of the meretricious arts whereby some modern conductors seek to draw attention to themselves at the expense of the work they are interpreting. . . . I need not enlarge on the work he has done in England specifically for Wagner's art. That is modern history, and is within the knowledge of all of us. Working under inconceivable difficulties, against age-old prejudices, against slipshod management, against the instincts of audiences who have come to think that the work they are listening to is of immeasurably less importance than themselves or their supper, he has yet brought it to pass that when we see his name on a programme we know that one-third of the work—the music—will be right: and we are grateful.'

Of the other member elected honoris causa, Mr. Parker said: 'Mr. Ashton Ellis, as you know, has devoted his whole life, every working—every waking—moment of his life, to Wagner. In the pursuit of his aim he has deliberately given up a lucrative profession; he has lived the life of a recluse; he has absorbed himself utterly in his work and in his study; he has surrendered himself, body, soul, mind, and intellect, to Wagner, with a passion far transcending that of a lover for his mistress. He is the true present-day representative of those astonishing figures who loom so largely in Wagner's history, who were willing to sacrifice, and did sacrifice, health, wealth, position, friendship, everything which men value, including self, in his service. He is one of the very few men in England who have really done something for Wagner; something so great, so self-less that we find difficulty in understanding it; that we can only admire and pass on. The doing has been his only reward.

By-and-by, years hence, long after our time, when the figure of Wagner has become mythical, and people go about trying to find out what manner of man he was, they will suddenly re-discover that long series of volumes to which Mr. Ashton Ellis's name is attached, and they will find in them an inexhaustible mine out of which they will be able to re-constitute the real Wagner, physically and mentally, down to the minutest detail, and to recover his life moment by moment. Then the reward will come. But posthumous honours are of very little service to their recipient, and it is we, who wonderingly look on at Ashton Ellis's superb enthusiasm and untiring labour, who must consider it a great privilege to say to him "Well done."

Mr. Parker then announced the competition, and went on to consider the present and future position of the Association: 'There is a great scheme [it seems advisable to add that the scheme has nothing whatever to do with pageantry in any form] by which once for all the Wagner ideal could be placed before our public in all its purity and loftiness. That scheme has moved one step forward in the sense that I have submitted it to a few practical men and women, and they have agreed that its execution is possible. But we must not be in a hurry. Our Association is in its infancy. It is no use publishing and discussing my plan until we are in a position to take decisive action. If we discussed it now, some enterprising entrepreneur might filch it and turn it into a commercial speculation. But I will say this much—and I ask you to believe that I have never, as far as I know, spoken an entirely useless falsehood, and I am speaking what I believe to be the truth now—my scheme will not necessarily cost you individually a farthing; it will be the culmination of all that has hitherto been done for Wagnerian art in England; it will be entirely non-commercial. While it will entail no special outlay on any member of the Association, neither will it put one penny in any of our pockets; it will shed a brilliant lustre on the Association as a whole, but not on any individual member; it will make 1913 a historical date in the musical annals of our country, and, finally, you will, as a matter of course, be at liberty to reject it if you do not like it.

'If you are willing to believe I know what I am talking about; if you will believe that the bee in my bonnet may really produce such a honeycomb, then I ask you to work blindly for a few months: to work with all your might, and with frenzied enthusiasm, to make this Association great enough and powerful enough to put its hand to a vast and difficult undertaking with the assurance of success. I have found in a long and varied experience that one should act on two contradictory maxims: 1st. Nothing is impossible; 2nd. Only the impossible is worth doing. We now have a membership of over two hundred, and we are proud of our numbers, but our membership must run into four figures. When we speak, we must speak with the voice of authority. Now the increase of membership can only be achieved by you; by personal efforts on your part. If each of the two hundred brought five members, we should be a thousand. When we are a thousand the doubling will be no trouble. Enthusiasm: that is all we need. You have now a distinct and clear objective to work for—the unveiling of a great secret. No motive is stronger than curiosity, and that curiosity cannot be gratified until we are strong enough to prevent others from stealing our prerogative, until we are strong enough to act upon it ourselves. I will pledge my word that as soon as you know the details of my scheme you will agree with me that, if we can carry it out, we shall be giving England such a gift as will make her grateful, and I promise you that you shall be glad and proud you are members of the Wagner Association.'

The programmes of the 'Historical chamber concerts,' to be given by Miss Zoe Pyne (Mrs. O. M. Hueffer) (violinist), and Miss Mary Cracroft (pianist), during their Autumn tour in America are, as they are intended to be, an educational summary of the development of violin music, and solo pianoforte music. The first illustrates composers from Corelli to Mozart; the second, Beethoven and Schubert. The third represents Romanticists, and the fourth, Moderns.

THE TOUR OF THE SHEFFIELD CHOIR.

Dr. Coward's insatiable zeal for 'doing things' on a large scale, which will reach its climax next year in the great World Tour of the Sheffield Choir in conjunction with Dr. Charles Harriss, was exemplified during the last days of September and the first days of October, when the Doctor and a choral army drawn from Sheffield and other districts, invaded the Continent and stayed for a week. The programme of the tour was as follows:

Saturday, September 24.	Travel from Sheffield.
Sunday, " 25.	Arrive at Aix-la-Chapelle.
Monday, " 26.	Rehearse and perform 'The Messiah.'
Tuesday, " 27.	Travel to Düsseldorf; rehearse and perform 'The Dream of Gerontius.'
Wednesday, " 28.	Travel to Essen, visit Krupp's, give a concert, and leave at midnight.
Thursday, " 29.	Arrive at Leipzig; perform Bach's 'Sing ye,' and other alla cappella music.
Friday, " 30.	Travel to Dresden; give miscellaneous concert.
Saturday, October 1.	Be prepared to give a concert in the evening.
Sunday, " 2.	Travel home.
Monday, " 3.

The musical part of the programme had no terrors for a Yorkshire chorus under Dr. Coward's supervision. The most arduous side of their duties was resistance to the fatigue of constant travelling, and to the excitement of novel surroundings. Bodily and mental repose are more essential for singing than for any other form of musical performance. In spite of the laudatory Press notices quoted below from the German papers, it is understood that the Choir did not always, notably at Leipzig, do justice to its reputation. Yorkshire choirs are supreme, but they are human.

At Aix-la-Chapelle the dramatic expression and dynamic effects exhibited in the choruses from 'The Messiah' made a deep impression. The interpretation of Macfarren's 'You stole my love,' among other good things, performed the unusual feat of moving the usually staid aristocracy of Aix to a demonstration. The following comments were made in the local press:

'They know and interpret Handel with unflinching enthusiasm. This is not the least reason for their perfection. Where else could such wonderful coloration, such quality of tone, such precision be found? Like a beautiful picture in mosaic, one beauty was added to another, and the whole ensemble was of overwhelming glory. That occasionally there was a little wavering in tone did not diminish the splendour of the whole.'—Echo.

'We have no need to be ashamed of our municipal chorus, but we wonder whether the part-song "You stole my love" would be rendered with such brilliancy by any of them. We were never allowed to lose sight of the brilliancy of the English singing, and we have never heard anything so beautifully or tenderly rendered as was "Moonlight" (Faning).'
—Allgemeine Zeitung.

At Düsseldorf the Municipality entertained the party three times during the day. The success of the performance of 'Gerontius' is indicated by the following extract from the Düsseldorfer Neueste Nachrichten: 'The effect of the choral portions was particularly striking. The beauty of the tonality in all four sections was in itself no small merit. But over and above this was the wonderful choral discipline, by which technical points were overcome with the utmost certainty. The tone-colour, moreover, was chosen appropriately as occasion demanded. Before all, the subtle and finely-executed effects of light and shade penetrated to the very soul of the hearer. . . . The interpretation was one which will never be forgotten by those who were present. Choir and soloists vied with each other in revealing to the listeners the deepest inner meaning of this lofty work.'

The party were not admitted to the works at Krupp's (Essen), but consoled themselves with a visit to the model village for the workers, where they gave a much appreciated sample of their singing. The evening programme included selections from 'Israel in Egypt,' in which the fine sonority of the voices found ample opportunity for producing its full effect. The miscellaneous numbers included Elgar's 'The dance.'

It was at Leipzig, reached after an all-night journey of nine hours, that the strenuous life began to take effect. The audience at the concert, however, though highly critical, were full of sympathy, which waxed warmer as the programme proceeded with such numbers as Bach's motet 'Sing ye,' Elgar's 'Go, song of mine,' and Rutland Boughton's arrangement 'King Arthur had three sons.' At Dresden, where the entertaining was on an especially lavish scale, the Leipzig programme was repeated by a fresher and more healthy choir, with corresponding improvement in effect.

The musical programme of the tour being now finished, the choir were able to give themselves up to enjoyment, which most of them took in the form of rest. Functions of all kinds had been a constant feature of the week's visits. Dr. Coward had been called upon for many speeches, in which international cordialities were his chief theme.

The choir numbered two hundred. The soloists who accompanied them were Miss Phyllis Lett, Mr. Webster Millar and Mr. Robert Charlesworth, who were well received by the German audiences and Press. The tour was managed by Mr. Lindlar, assisted by Mr. W. S. Skelton, Mr. Arthur Burrows and others.

PROMENADE CONCERTS.

A welcome feature of the present series has been Mr. Wood's readiness to revise his programmes in order to grant a second hearing to novelties that were well received at their first hearing. It is gratifying to find this honour accorded to a British composition, namely, Dr. Walford Davies's fine 'Festal' Overture for orchestra. The work was played for the first time in London, as recorded in our last issue, on September 20, and on October 1 it was repeated. It has now been included in the programme of the Queen's Hall Symphony Concert on November 5. The Suite 'L'attaque du moulin,' from Bruneau's opera, in which the elements of popularity are clearly traceable, achieved a similar success, being repeated on September 27 and October 20. It is also down for performance at the Symphony Concert on January 21, 1911.

The performance of Mr. Norman O'Neill's four 'Blue-bird' dances on September 29, threw a more searching light upon these clever and delicate compositions than they have experienced before. It says a great deal for their merit that they gained in estimation under a test which would prove the undoing of most music written for the theatre.

On October 4, a 'Sketch for orchestra,' by Dr. Joseph W. G. Hathaway, entitled 'Sunshine,' received its first performance. Perhaps the music embodies recollections of a bright but windy day in March or April, for the suggestion of chilliness and a disturbing element was often present. Viewed apart from its programme the work was a welcome example of the inventive and technical powers of one of our promising young composers.

A set of variations for string orchestra on 'The Vicar of Bray,' by Ernest Austin (Op. 35) were played for the first time on October 6, and gave universal pleasure by their clever devices and fanciful scoring. The developments of the theme are governed by no programmatic meanings except in the jocular last variation, in which a novel idea in musical humour was found to be exceedingly felicitous in its effect. The work fully deserves a re-hearing. On the same evening two picturesque pieces for flute and orchestra, 'Légende' and 'Scherzo brillante,' by M. Georges Dorlay, a member of the Orchestra, were played by Mr. Albert Fransella. After a performance of the 'Peer Gynt' suite, the unavailing demand for a repetition of the last movement lasted considerably longer than the repetition would have taken.

On October 13 we had the unusual feature of a composer conducting his own work at a Promenade Concert. The composer was Herr Emil Paur, conductor of the Pittsburgh Orchestra, and the work was his symphony 'An der Natur,' composed last year and now played for the first time in England. The work is highly to be commended in that its chief idea is to please. The composer showed no desire to prove himself cleverer than or otherwise different from other people, and filled his score with melodies and devices that might have occurred to many others. The orchestration was the best feature.

A charming daintily-scored Serenade for small orchestra by Mr. Percy Pitt received its first performance on October 13 and was repeated on October 20. Another event of note during the last week of the season was the performance of Elgar's Symphony in A flat on October 19. The season came to an end on October 22.

BEECHAM OPERA AT COVENT GARDEN.

For the second time disaster has overtaken a Beecham Opera Season at its commencement. On Saturday, October 1, the performance of Eugene d'Albert's 'Tiefland,' with which the present series was to open, had to be cancelled owing to the indisposition of Miss Marguerite Lémon, who was cast for the heroine. The season therefore did not commence till the following Monday, when Ambroise Thomas's 'Hamlet,' an opera of far less striking quality, was performed under the direction of Signor L. Camilieri, with Miss Mignon Nevada as Ophelia and Mr. Clarence Whitehill as Hamlet.

'TIEFLAND.'

This work, which has achieved great popularity on the Continent, was at length produced on October 5 for the first time in England. The story is one which the Sicilian players recently made familiar to Londoners under the title of 'Feudalissimo.' Sebastiano, who holds a very complete sway over a district on the slopes of the Pyrenees, is nevertheless in financial difficulties which he can only solve by a rich marriage. This necessitates providing a husband for Marta, his protégée, in order to silence gossip. Pedro, a simple shepherd, consents joyfully, and the marriage is celebrated. When Pedro finds that his position as husband is to be merely nominal, he kills Sebastiano and flees with his wife back to the mountains. Such a story, as it was unfolded in the libretto, was well suited to musical treatment and suggestive to a composer who knows, as d'Albert knows, how to write operatic music. His setting was full of interest, if not strong in invention. Its significance grew largely out of the use of the leit-motif, although the themes themselves were not inspired and their use was lacking in subtlety. One or two little tunes had been heard to satiety long before the evening was over. At the highly dramatic moments of the action, especially at the exciting murder of the villain, the music fell to a lower plane. Very little of the opera, however, was anything but artistically conceived, easily intelligible and felicitously scored. Yet it is hardly of the quality to achieve vast popularity in this country, such as it enjoys on the Continent. The fact that nearly every word was heard distinctly was largely to the credit of the composer, although this does not in the least diminish the praise due to the singers for their care in this matter. Among the artists, special mention must be made of Miss Muriel Terry, who performed the extraordinary feat of learning the part of Marta in four days, in order to replace Miss Marguerite Lémon, whose indisposition continued. Her representation of the heroine was full of dramatic power and expressiveness, and was carried out with admirable confidence. Mr. John Coates was beyond praise as the shepherd Pedro, and Mr. Frederic Austin seconded him with all his ability as Sebastiano. Miss Maggie Teyte, Mr. Lewys James and Mr. Robert Radford were excellent in the smaller parts. Miss Lémon was able to take up her part on October 17, and played it with naturalness and charm and fine vocal ability.

'LE CHEMINEAU.'

This opera, by Xavier Leroux, was produced for the first time in England on October 12, before an audience that should have been larger. It is a typical example of modern French opera, with love-interest partly of a type that appeals to French more than to English minds. Le Chemineau, who has been well described as a super-tramp, is a wanderer frequently subject to the 'call of the road.' One of these calls summons him to break off an attachment with Toinette, the chief female character, and 'our hero' retires for a large part of the evening, including an interval that represents the passage of twenty years. Toinette marries immediately after his departure, and the plot becomes too complicated to give in further detail. The chief characteristic of the extremely pleasant music was its delicacy and light texture. The composer's dependence upon muted strings and soft chords on the wood-wind gave the impression, towards the end, of mannerism; but otherwise the artistic (not dramatic) propriety of the music left nothing to be desired. Some of the ideas, and the passages built out of them, were fascinating in the extreme. As commentary to a drama, the music appealed by its easy-going characterization and amiable pathos. It gave the impression that without a consummate performance, such as was given on this occasion, the effect of the opera would have been considerably less. Miss Elizabeth Amsden, as Toinette, and M. Roselly, as Le Chemineau, were the chief strength of the cast. They were ably seconded by Miss Beatrice la Palme, Miss Edna Thornton, and Messrs. d'Oisly, de Sousa, James, Harry Dearth and de Manby. Mr. Percy Pitt conducted. The opera was sung in French.

We are all grateful to Mr. Beecham for giving us the chance of hearing these two operas and for providing performances of such a high pitch of excellence; and we look forward to hearing further novelties from the alluring and ambitious scheme that he set forth at the beginning of the season. Meantime he has been giving us 'Elektra' (under his own direction), 'Tristan,' 'Carmen,' 'Tales of Hoffmann,' 'Fidelio' and 'Tannhäuser.'

QUEEN'S HALL SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

The first concert of what promises to be a highly interesting series was given on October 22, under the direction of Mr. Henry J. Wood. The interest of novelty centred in Mr. Granville Bantock's 'Three dramatic dances' which, in their orchestral version, received their first performance in London. In reviewing the pianoforte version in our issue for July, 1909, we wrote that 'a darkened theatre, a concealed orchestra, a classical dancer and the odour of Eastern incense would certainly help to attune the listener's mood and thoughts to a proper appreciation of Mr. Bantock's "Dramatic dances."' The need of these accessories was almost completely removed by the glamorous colouring of Mr. Bantock's orchestration, which not only supplied the 'atmosphere' but seemed to give point to the musical ideas and to knit each movement into a self-sufficient whole. The chief soloist of the concert was M. Raoul Pugno, who was heard in Bach's fifth 'Brandenburg' Concerto and Mozart's Concerto in F major (K. 459). There is no need to enlarge upon the polished elegance and intellectually-controlled vivacity of his playing, qualities which did not fail on this occasion. The other soloists in the Bach work were Mr. Albert Fransella (flute) and Mr. Maurice Sons (violin). The remainder of the programme consisted of two Aubades for small orchestra by Lalo and Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony.

THE BRASS BAND FESTIVAL.

This annual event took place at the Crystal Palace on October 1, under the management, as usual, of Mr. J. H. Iles. As the North of England is usually considered to be the home of the brass band, it is worthy of note that of the hundred and fifty-six bands competing on this occasion thirty-nine came from London, Surrey and Kent, twenty-nine from Yorkshire, the remainder being representative of the whole country. Seventeen bands entered for the championship section, which resulted as follows: 1st, Foden's Motor Wagon Works; 2nd, Irwell Springs; 3rd, Spencer's Steel Works; 4th, Shaw (holders); 5th, Kettering Town; 6th, Hebden Bridge; 7th, South Moor Colliery. In other competitions the winners were Birmingham City, Sandown, Bridlington Excelsior, Black Dyke Juniors, Swanwick Colliery, and Mariners, Keighley. After the contests the massed bands took part in a concert, under the direction of Mr. Iles and Mr. S. Cope.

A series of lectures on 'Musical Appreciation' will be given by Mr. Stewart Macpherson, with copious illustrations, at the Tobias Matthey Pianoforte School, 96, Wimpole Street, commencing on November 2.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

The following awards have been made in the Scholarship Examinations: The Ada Lewis Scholarships—singing (contralto), to Sybil D. Flux; (bass), to William F. Richardson and Leonard F. Hubbard; violin, to Edith P. Abraham and Kathleen G. Petts; violoncello, to Doris Griffiths; harp, to Frances R. M. C. Wright. The Liszt Scholarship (pianoforte or composition) to Vivian Langrish. The Sinton-Dolby Scholarship (contralto) to Vera Newburg. The Dove Scholarship (violin) to Herbert J. Brine. The Goring Thomas Scholarship (composition) to Hugh Priestley Smith. The Ross Scholarship (wood-wind instruments) to Edward J. Augarde (clarinet). The George Mence Smith Scholarship, tenable for two years, of the annual value of about £26, is open to competition, biennially, by male and female candidates, at alternate elections. It will be awarded to that candidate who exhibits the best voice in conjunction with musical aptitude. The next competition will be open to female candidates, and will be held on or about January 13, 1911. Candidates must not be, nor ever have been, students at the Royal Academy of Music, and must be, in the case of females, under the age of twenty-one.

The operatic class, directed by Mr. Edgardo Lèvi, are rehearsing Humperdinck's 'Hansel and Gretel' and Schubert's 'Der Hieslieher' (English version by Mr. Claude Aveling) with a view to performance in December.

Two lectures on 'The principles and teaching of interpretation in pianoforte-playing' were delivered by Mr. Tobias Matthay on October 12 and 19.

THE COMING SEASON.

The following list is supplementary to that given in our last issue:

The Queen's Hall Choral Society will give their first concert of the season on November 15. The first performance in Great Britain of a new and extended selection from Acts 1, 2 and 3 of 'Parsifal' will be the chief feature.

The Strings Club have arranged four open concerts to take place at Steinway Hall on October 22, November 28, January 28, and February 27.

Crystal Palace Orchestral Society and Choir (conductor Mr. Walter W. Hedgcock)—Hiawatha, complete; Battle of the Baltic, Stanford; Loreley (finale), Mendelssohn.

Dartford and District Choral and Orchestral Society (conductor Mr. David Mackenzie)—Faust, Gounod.

Dover Choral Union (conductor Mr. H. J. Taylor)—Faust, Gounod; Overture, 'Christmas in the Olden Time,' H. J. Taylor.

East Finchley and Muswell Hill Musical Society (conductor Mr. George R. Ceiley)—Death of Minnehaha; The Revenge; Songs of the Fleet, Stanford; God's time is the best, Bach; Song of Destiny; Sands of Dee, Harris; Blest pair of Sirens.

Fulham Choral Society (conductor Mr. George H. Wilby)—Eve of Waterloo, H. J. Taylor.

Great Eastern Railway Musical Society (conductor Mr. W. Johnson Galloway)—Warden of the Cinque Ports, James Lyon; Rhapsody for Alto and Chorus, Brahms; part-songs.

Guildford Choral and Orchestral Society (conductor Mr. A. Hollier)—King Olaf; Elijah.

Sevensoaks Choral and Orchestral Society (conductor, Mr. W. A. Taylor)—Song of Destiny; 95th Psalm, Mendelssohn.

The Munro Davison Choral Society (conductor Mr. Munro Davison)—Mass in C, Beethoven.

Western District Choral Society (conductor, Mr. Edwin Barrett)—Elijah; Spring, from 'The Seasons'; First Walpurgis Night; Israel in Egypt.

West Norwood Choral and Orchestral Society (conductor Mr. Percy S. Bright)—Faust, Gounod; Sea Wanderers, Bantock; Stabat Mater, Dvorak.

London Concerts.

Although the active period of concert-giving did not set in until late in October, the first few weeks of the season were remarkable for the imposing array of talent that was set before the public. Within the space of one month recitals were given by Madame Tetrassini, Kreisler, Kubelik, Ysaye, Pachmann, Backhaus, Sammarco, Szigeti, Mark Hambourg, and John McCormack; and Pugno appeared at a Symphony Concert.

VOCAL RECITALS.

Madame Tetrassini's recital took place on September 24 on the Handel orchestra at the Crystal Palace. She lived up to her reputation, a task that was by no means easy. The features of her style have been described so often that it is sufficient to say that they were present and made their full effect on this occasion. The numbers in her programme were 'Caro nome,' Benedict's 'Carnevale di Venise' variations, and the Polonaise from 'Mignon,' and to these she added 'Voi che sapete,' 'Batti, batti,' and Chapi's 'Carceleras.' To many, perhaps the majority, in the audience, this was probably the first occasion of hearing Madame Tetrassini, and a first revelation of the actualities of bel canto. It goes without saying that the prima donna had a great reception. Her accompaniments were played by the Queen's Hall Orchestra, under Mr. Henry J. Wood, who also directed separate orchestral numbers.

Madame Tetrassini's frequent operatic confère, Signor Sammarco, gave a recital at Bechstein Hall on October 13. He did not confine himself to selections from his operatic repertoire, but gave examples of all schools and styles. A notable feature of his programme was 'Quale onor di te sia degno,' from Monteverde's 'Orfeo.' In lyrical songs as well as in dramatic excerpts his well-known distinction of style was a constant joy.

Mr. John McCormack's programme at Queen's Hall, on October 18, was pleasantly varied, and well chosen to exhibit his best qualities. It naturally contained operatic excerpts and Irish ballads. The former included 'Che gelida manina,' from Puccini's 'La Bohème.' In the duet 'O Mimì, tu più non torni,' Mr. McCormack was joined by Signor Sammarco.

Mr. Lawrence Kellie gave the first of four recitals as composer and vocalist at Steinway Hall, on October 20, and succeeded in giving great pleasure in both capacities.

A much varied and exacting programme was chosen by Miss Margaret Layton for her recital at Bechstein Hall on October 20, and the amount of success she achieved was an indication of high ability.

VIOLIN RECITALS.

Herr Kreisler's recital took place on September 24 at Queen's Hall. In Bach's Suite in E minor, with which he opened, his luscious tone and his clear musically phrasing were displayed to the greatest advantage. Among the especially notable features of the occasion was a vivid and imaginative reading of Tartini's Sonata 'Il trillo del Diavolo.' The programme included Pugnani's vigorous Prelude and Allegro, a charming Andante by Giovanni Battista Martini, Louis Couperin's graceful 'La Précieuse,' most delightfully played, pieces by Dittersdorf and Paganini, and Tartini's Variations on a theme of Corelli. These were presented in the form of Herr Kreisler's own arrangements. Three interesting compositions from the recital-giver's own pen, entitled 'Romance,' 'Caprice Viennois' and 'Tambourin Chinois,' added interest to the occasion and proved very effective. The accompanist, Mr. Haddon Squire, carried out his duties at the pianoforte admirably.

Herr Kubelik made his re-appearance at Queen's Hall on October 6, when he was assisted by the New Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Landon Ronald. Max Bruch's Concerto in G minor, the well-known example by Tchaikovsky, and smaller pieces such as Paganini's Rondo 'La clochette,' made up the programme. Herr Kubelik's style gains in strength and virility, and his wonderful left-hand technique and his intonation remain as perfect as ever. His bowing, though excellent, is perhaps not quite on so high a level. He played Tchaikovsky's Concerto with brilliance and strong rhythmical feeling, if somewhat passionately, and gave a sensational performance of Paganini's Rondo.

The chief event of the season has so far been the concert which M. Eugène Ysaÿe gave with the Queen's Hall Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Henry J. Wood, on October 8, at Queen's Hall. M. Ysaÿe was in his very finest form, and played with a beauty of tone, warmth of feeling and enthusiasm that went straight to the heart of the audience. The most striking quality of M. Ysaÿe's interpretations is perhaps that their technical flawlessness is far removed from anything mechanical; from the first to the last his playing impresses one as the living utterance of a great artistic personality, who commands and is able to convey every shade of emotion. The programme included Concertos by Vivaldi, Viotti (in A minor), and that of Beethoven, of which a memorable performance was given. As an encore M. Ysaÿe played Wagner's 'Albumbblatt,' as arranged by Wilhelmj. The orchestra were heard separately in Haydn's Symphony 'The Philosopher,' and Andante from Mozart's 'Cassation' (K. 63).

On October 15, M. Joska Szizgeti, the clever and still improving young violinist, gave a recital at Bechstein Hall by which he upheld his reputation. His programme included four new works, three of which, including a set of variations, were by Hubay; the fourth was a Sarabande on the G string by Sulzer.

PIANOFORTE RECITALS.

On October 1, Herr Backhaus gave a recital at Queen's Hall. His playing on this occasion was distinguished by more than usual depth and artistic maturity; his interpretation of Schubert's Fantasia (Op. 15) being in every respect a great achievement. The programme also included three interesting pieces by Debussy, 'Homage à Rameau,' 'Jardin sous la pluie' and 'Cahier d'un esquisse.' Liszt's études 'Feux follets' and 'Eroica,' served admirably to exhibit the pianist's technical facility.

M. de Pachmann, who, on October 12, gave a recital at Queen's Hall, exercised his usual fascination over a large portion of his numerous audience. His beautiful touch and the perfect evenness of his finger technique were displayed to the greatest advantage in Weber's Rondo 'Perpetuum mobile' from the Sonata in C major, and Henselt's Etude 'Si oiseau j'étais.' The programme also included three Mazurkas by Chopin, which could hardly have been played with more originality and charm; Schumann's Sonata in G minor, Op. 22; and a small piece, 'Homage à Pachmann,' by Walter Imboden, the execution of which seemed to cause the pianist keen enjoyment.

In giving his recital at Queen's Hall on October 19, Mr. Mark Hambourg made praiseworthy and often successful efforts to redeem his playing from the accusation, so often brought against it, of lack of sympathy. His programme was chosen from the works of Schumann and Chopin. He was more successful with the former, especially in the Fantaisie, Op. 17, and the 'Faschingsschwank aus Wien.'

Miss Ursula Newton, who gave her first pianoforte recital at Bechstein Hall on October 19, essayed the difficult task of interpreting a sonata by M. Vincent d'Indy, and in the result showed high ability. She is a pupil of Busoni.

The Alexandra Palace Choral and Orchestral Society opened their season on October 8, with a striking performance of 'Elijah,' under the direction of Mr. Allen Gill. The choir has long since attained beauty and richness of tone and executive efficiency unusual to southern choral bodies, and in the present performance showed that their progress in excellence has by no means ceased. Mr. Gill is alive to all the necessities and possibilities of choral expression, and the interpretation he secured on this occasion showed how fully his singers realised his aims in this respect. The soloists were Miss Emily Breare, Miss Pitt-Soper, Miss Lucy Nuttall, Miss Gurney Jones, Mr. Henry Turpenney, Mr. Stanley Ridout, Mr. Herbert Brown and Mr. Jackson Potter. Mr. G. D. Cunningham was the organist.

The fiftieth anniversary of the formation of the 'Liederkrantz' was celebrated by a concert given at Connaught Rooms on October 22. This male-voice choir, directed by Herr Max Laistner, was heard in the cantata 'Geisterpredigt,' composed by the conductor and performed on this occasion for the first time. Other smaller choral numbers were in the programme. Accompaniments and separate numbers, one of which was Herr Laistner's 'Symphonic festival march,' composed for the occasion, were played by the London Symphony Orchestra. Songs were contributed by Madame Sobrino.

The series of Sunday concerts given by Mr. Beecham at Covent Garden commenced on October 9 with a Wagner night, at which Mr. Beecham conducted his own Orchestra. On October 16 a miscellaneous non-orchestral concert was given with the help of well-known artists. On October 23 a popular orchestral programme was carried out before a large audience.

At the first two concerts of the series organized by the Classical Concerts Society, which took place at Bechstein Hall on October 12 and 19, the violoncello playing of Señor Casals was the attraction. In company with Mr. Donald Francis Tovey he played Sonatas by Beethoven in C and D, Op. 103, and by Brahms, Op. 99, at the first concert. At the second he played Bach's Suite in D minor, and joined the Motto Quartet in a performance of Schubert's Quintet in C, Op. 163. Haydn's Quartet in G minor, Op. 74, No. 3, was also in the programme.

A concert was given on October 13 in the Great Hall of the Church House, Westminster, by Miss Eva Digby O'Neill, in aid of the funds of the National Blind Relief Society. A number of well-known vocalists and instrumentalists took part, and contributed to the success of the occasion.

The Mozart Society opened their twenty-first season with a concert at Portman Rooms on October 15.

The Brothers Chermiavski, juvenile prodigies on the violin, violoncello and pianoforte, gave a recital at the Crystal Palace on October 15.

On October 18, at Clifford's Inn, Mr. Arnold Dolmetsch gave convincing illustration of the improvements he has devised in the manufacture of harpsichords and clavichords, and in the methods of playing these instruments.

MUSIC IN VIENNA.

(FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

October 13, 1910.

In the Imperial Court Opera it has long been the usual custom to celebrate the day of baptism of the Emperor, on October 4, with the performance of new works. The occasion is generally looked upon as the opening of the Opera season proper. This year the Intermezzo 'Susannens Geheimnis,' by Wolf-Ferrari, was chosen for performance. A comic opera of the best type, excellently scored, the work was received cordially, if not with tremendous enthusiasm. A small sensation was provided with the succeeding first performance of the mimic pantomime 'Der Schneemann,' the music of which was written by Erich Wolfgang Korngold, the twelve-year-old son of the musical critic of the Neue Freie Presse, Dr. Julius Korngold. The little composer-predigy has certainly shown rare talent and remarkably early development. After the performance (which, by the way, was most effectively carried out) he received an ovation. The further development of his gifts will be watched with interest. He seems, so far, to have given too much attention to the modern school of composing.

On October 12, 'Quo vadis,' by Jean Nougues, a complicated and extensive work, was given for the first time at the Volkssoper. The libretto of this melodramatic opera has been adapted from the well-known novel by Henryk Sienkiewicz. Director Simons provided the work with a magnificent mise en scène. Soloists, choir and orchestra all gave of their best and thus helped to secure a popular success, which will no doubt lead to many repetitions of the work. With regard to the music itself little can be said. It is deficient in real invention and full of crude harmonic and instrumental effects.

Music in the Provinces.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.)

BELFAST.

The season of music began in Belfast with a miscellaneous concert of the Philharmonic Society on October 4. No large choral work is possible so early in the season, as the temptations of the seaside and country, especially in such a charming autumn as the present one has been, keep the most ardent amateur from the necessary rehearsals.

Mendelssohn's 114th Psalm opened the concert, and it was closed by a cleverly written part-song by Dr. Koeller, in which he has fitted very appropriate music to the touching words 'Tis night in Ireland now,' by D'Arcy McGee. Madame Donalda and Mr. Herbert Brown were the vocalists, with Mr. Cyril Towsy as accompanist. The fine artists, Herr Backhaus and Zimbalist, also contributed to a successful concert.

BIRMINGHAM.

The first popular Saturday night concert of the present season was given by the Midland Musical Society at the Town Hall on October 1, under Mr. A. J. Cotton's able conductorship. To popularize works of high artistic standard among the masses is certainly a most laudable effort on the part of this Society, and must be considered as an educational medium of incalculable value to musical art. The works chosen were Sir Edward Elgar's 'King Olaf,' and Brahms's 'Song of Destiny,' given with the full choir and orchestra appertaining to this old-established musical organization. The whole performance of 'King Olaf' showed a distinct advance on its previous rendering two years ago, especially as to its choral effects, the choir having evidently bestowed more care on its preparation. The principal parts were exceedingly well sung by Miss Mary Lund, Mr. Joseph Reed, and Mr. Sidney Stoddard, and the orchestra vividly brought out the picturesque orchestral colouring. Brahms's 'Song of Destiny' proved a crucial test, and for special distinction one has to point out the fine singing of the final portion, 'But man may not linger,' with its detached phrases in duple rhythm against the triple measure of the accompaniment.

The Birmingham Temperance Philharmonic Choral Society's first concert of the season took place in the Town Hall on October 8, given under the direction of Mr. W. G. Proverbs, who has lately re-joined the Society as choral trainer and conductor. The choir numbers seventy mixed voices, and is evenly balanced, all the voices being of a good tone-quality.

Messrs. Dale & Forty, who have now entered the arena of local impresarii, gave their first concert in the Town Hall on October 11, for which they had secured Herr Kubelik and Herr Backhaus, the vocalists being Miss Marie Stiven, and the accompanist Herr Ludwig Schwab. The features of the concert were Herr Backhaus's magnificent rendering of Schubert's 'Wanderer Fantasia' and Herr Kubelik's splendid playing of Tartini's sonata 'Il trillo del Diavolo' and Bach's 'Chaconne.' With two such eminent artists it was to be regretted that no concerted piece was included in the programme.

The Royal Society of Artists's musical matinees in connection with the autumn season's exhibition of pictures were inaugurated on October 8 with an interesting and varied concert, under Mr. Oscar Pollack's direction, at which a number of new artists were introduced. In connection with the Arts and Crafts Exhibition, held in the Town Hall, September 20, 21, 22, 23, and 24, Mr. Rutland Boughton gave a series of vocal and orchestral concerts, introducing a number of new works not heard here previously. Unfortunately time and circumstance did not permit of sufficient rehearsals, in consequence of which one could hardly expect finished performances. Mr. Rutland Boughton also included in his scheme his 'Midnight,' Berlioz's 'Beatrice and Benedict' overture, a symphony by Algernon Ashton, and works by Edgar Bainton.

The newly-organized Birmingham Philharmonic Society gave their first concert of a series of eight in the Town Hall on October 19, under the excellent conductorship of

Mr. Landon Ronald. The Society has been formed for the establishment of a high-class local orchestra, and the concerts intended to be given will be conducted by different eminent conductors, English and foreign. The rank and file consists of eighty performers, principally culled from the Birmingham Symphony Orchestra, augmented by a contingent of London instrumentalists as leaders of the various orchestral sections. At present the weakest portion of the orchestra are the strings, lacking in body and tone-power to make up a first-class orchestra. The principal item was Sir Edward Elgar's glorious Symphony, which received a poetical reading, the nuances of light and shade, rhythm and phrasing being wonderfully realised. Miss Irene Sharrer gave a most finished rendering of Grieg's Pianoforte concerto in A minor. The other purely orchestral pieces were G. Von Holst's picturesque 'A Somerset Rhapsody,' and Dukas's 'L'apprenti Sorcier.'

The Birmingham Festival Choral Society inaugurated their season's concerts with a performance of Saint-Saëns's 'Samson and Delilah,' given in the Town Hall on October 20, with full chorus and orchestra and the following principals: Madame Kirkby Lunn, Mr. Frank Mullings and Mr. Robert Charlesworth. Its inclusion in this season's scheme was owing to the signal success achieved with this work last season, and once more Madame Kirkby Lunn secured a veritable triumph. Mr. Frank Mullings, a local tenor, gave the part of Samson with temperament and beauty of voice. Quite excellent was Mr. Charlesworth as the High Priest. Chorus and orchestra were on their mettle, the whole performance being the finest yet secured by the Society. Dr. Sinclair conducted with his customary tact and judgment.

Mr. Sydney Grew is giving a course of lectures at the English Lecture Theatre of the University, on the music included in the programmes of the Philharmonic Society's concerts.

BOURNEMOUTH.

The programmes of the first eight of Mr. Dan Godfrey's sixteenth series of Symphony Concerts, arranged to take place on successive Thursdays from October 6 to May 11, display the usual high quality, as also do those of the first eight supplemental classical concerts, taking place on Mondays from October 10. The list of works provisionally selected for first performance during the season is particularly impressive. It is probable that Sir Hubert Parry, Sir Alexander Mackenzie, Sir Charles Stanford, Professor Bantock, Mr. Edward German and Mr. Coleridge-Taylor will conduct works of their own.

The initial concert, on October 6, was noteworthy by reason of the fact that it was the means of introducing Kalinnikoff's Symphony No. 2, in A major, to an English audience. The composer's Symphony in G minor has already been heard several times in this country, and the credit is Mr. Dan Godfrey's that an opportunity has now arrived for a comparison of the two works. It cannot be said that the later symphony is as effective as the G minor example; the treatment of the material is as clear-cut in the former as it is in the latter; the orchestration is equally masterly, but in the later work there is a looseness of construction and a lack of finish which tend to render it too rhapsodical. Much of it, however, is very pleasing, and the scoring is certainly extremely brilliant. The first sixteen bars form the basis of the entire work, for the thematic material throughout is built up from this introductory section. The opening movement is noticeable for its very charming second theme; the Andante cantabile is somewhat conventional as to melody; the third movement is extremely fanciful; but the best is kept back to the last, the final movement having many fine inventive moments and arousing the hearer's interest in no small measure. One thing is very marked, viz., that Kalinnikoff's use of the Slavonic idioms is immeasurably less than that of the great majority of his fellow-countrymen; a large portion of the music might have been written by a native of France, or even of Italy. Both Mr. Godfrey and his instrumentalists deserve much praise for the splendid performance which this somewhat unequal composition undoubtedly received; the audience, a very large and representative one, applauded their successful efforts with exceeding heartiness.

BRISTOL.

Since it was determined to hold the festival in 1911, a section of the committee thought the festivities in connection with the Coronation would prove a drawback, and hence it would be better to postpone the festival till 1912. At a meeting of the committee on October 20, it was decided that the festival should be deferred till 1912, and the guarantee fund will be in force for the later date.

An agreeable chamber concert was given at the Victoria Rooms on October 8, and there was a large attendance. The players were Miss Mary Lock (pianoforte), Mrs. Fitzherbert (violin), Miss Gladys Home (viola), and Mr. Herbert Walenn (violoncello). There were effective interpretations of Schumann's Sonata for pianoforte and violin in A minor (Op. 105), Beethoven's Sonata for pianoforte and violoncello in A (Op. 69), and Dvorák's Quartet in E flat for pianoforte and strings. At intervals Mrs. Archbold, a Clifton lady, sang English and German songs with taste.

Miss Ada Bennett, a contralto, who has taken part in local concerts for some years, is about to leave for Canada, and she has so many musical friends in Bristol that they arranged a farewell concert for her, and on October 13 it was given at the Victoria Rooms, in the presence of a crowded assembly. Miss Edith Evans, Miss Ada Bennett, Mr. Sydney Bennett, Mr. Montague Worlock and Mr. W. Irving were the vocalists. Mr. Maurice Alexander (violin) and Mr. Arthur Baynon (pianoforte) also assisted.

DEVON AND CORNWALL.

Immediately before leaving for London on the resignation of the bandmastership of the Plymouth Royal Marine Light Infantry, Mr. Frank Winterbottom gave a farewell concert, on September 28, closing the long series of Symphony Concerts which he has organized and conducted in the Stonehouse Town Hall since 1894. The two middle movements from the 'Pathetic Symphony' (Tchaikovsky) were performed, and it was not without a touch of pathos that the concert and the series concluded with Haydn's 'Farewell Symphony,' the perpetration of the 'joke' leaving the conductor solitary on the platform. He took the opportunity of explaining the initiation and raison d'être of the concerts. The list of music performed to the date of the last season but one shows that thirty-three symphonies have been played, which, together with sixty suites, twenty-four morceaux and characteristic pieces, and forty-two concerted works and solos, comprise a voluminous and varied repertoire.

The statement made under the above heading in the last issue of the Musical Times, that the concerts 'now pass into the management and conductorship of Mr. R. G. Evans, Bandmaster of the Royal Garrison Artillery, who will transfer the locale from the Stonehouse Town Hall to the Plymouth Guildhall, and will open the season in November,' was incorrect. The symphony concerts in the Stonehouse Town Hall will be continued under the conductorship of Mr. J. W. Newton, the new bandmaster of the Plymouth Division R.M.L.I. The orchestra which Mr. Winterbottom conducted at his symphony concerts consisted mainly of the bandmen of the Plymouth Division R.M.L.I., who formed over ninety per cent. of the total number of musicians.

The Mayor (represented by the Deputy-Mayor) and Corporation according to custom attended, on October 1, the opening concert of the new season of weekly Corporation concerts in Plymouth Guildhall; and the Deputy-Mayor congratulated all concerned on the success of the past years and augured continued prosperity for the future, appreciating the great influence which the concerts, as organized by Mr. H. Moreton, borough organist, had evidenced in raising the taste and standard of judgment of the public. On October 12 a concert given in Plymouth to augment the Pardew Memorial Fund was in its character and composition unique, since six local musicians took the baton in turn. The proceeds amounted to over £160.

Greenbank Choir, on October 9, gave a first performance of John E. West's cantata 'Faith and praise,' conducted by Mr. R. Lang. On October 16, Wesley Choir, conducted by Mr. R. Pappin, sang Gaul's 'The Holy City,' and on October 17 gave a concert of part-songs, assisted by Miss Mary Lund, soprano; Mr. David J. Jones, tenor; Miss Hilda Smart, pianoforte; and Miss Ethel Allen, violin.

The band of the Prince of Wales's Leinster Regiment made its first appearance in the concert room on an ambitious scale on October 19, and gave two military combination concerts in the Plymouth Guildhall.

At Torquay, on October 20, the Haydn String Quartet opened a new series of three chamber concerts with the 'Emperor' Quartet (Haydn), and Rubinstein's Quartet in C minor.

Cornwall has not yet shown any musical activities for the new season, though preparations are in hand. The Bodmin Choral Society, which has been in suspension for several years, will now be resuscitated by Mr. R. Glendinning. The annual meeting of the Launceston Choral Society, of which Mr. C. S. Parsonson is the able conductor, showed an advance in the roll of membership and a satisfactory condition of finance. The coming season will be the semi-jubilee of the Society, which was established twenty-five years ago. 'Judas Maccabæus' has been put in rehearsal for the next concert.

EDINBURGH.

The Edinburgh musical season is getting into swing again. In November, Messrs. Paterson & Sons' orchestral concerts begin, for which the services of the Scottish Orchestra, with Mr. Henri Verbruggen as leader, have again been secured. Instead of Dr. Cowen, M. Emil Mlynarski will act as director and conductor at all the concerts, save that given on January 30, 1911, which will be conducted by Herr Michael Balling.

Messrs. Methven & Simpson announce another series of seven classical concerts. M. Maurice Ravel will take part in the fifth concert, at which his String quartet will be performed for the first time in Scotland.

If a sufficient number of subscribers come forward to raise a guarantee fund of about £800, Herr Ernst Denhof purposes giving in February a performance of Strauss's 'Elektra,' under the conductorship of Herr Balling.

The choral societies in the city are settling down to their winter's work. The Choral Union (conductor, Mr. T. H. Collinson) is studying Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius,' Parry's 'Blest pair of Sirens,' and the 'Messiah.' Mr. John Kirkhope's choir is practising Mendelssohn's 'Walpurgis Night' and Schumann's 'Pilgrimage of the rose.' The works selected for study by Mr. J. A. Moonie's choir are as usual of a varied nature, and comprise 'The songs of the fleet,' Stanford; 'Song of the Norms,' Hoffmann; 'Caledonia,' W. B. Moonie (a son of the conductor); 'Salamis,' Gernsheim; the 'Messiah,' and part of 'Elijah.' The Western Choral Society (conductor, Mr. D. Blair) is taking up Somervell's 'The Charge of the Light Brigade,' and 'The Banner of St. George.' The Northern Choral Society (conductor, Mr. James Crichton) has in hand Bridge's 'The Flag of England' and the 'Lobgesang.'

For his opening lecture, given in the University Music Class Room on October 10, Professor Niecks chose as his subject 'The history of Opera in its main outlines,' and in his concluding remarks, when referring to the compositions of Richard Strauss, he said: 'The latest developer of opera, in his "Salome" and still more in his "Elektra," divests music of its æsthetic qualities and uses it simply as a nerve stimulant. This most recent evolution of opera would cause despair if one could believe it to be anything but an aberration, an extravagance, which may have a momentary sensational success, but passes quickly away like all that is unwholesome and ugly. And the thought may comfort us that when night is darkest, dawn is nearest.'

GLASGOW.

Herr Ernst Denhof has arranged to give a series of operatic festival performances during the week beginning April 10, 1911, the programme comprising the 'Ring of the Nibelung' and Strauss's 'Elektra,' with Herr Michael Balling as conductor. The arrangements are meanwhile provisional, but it is expected that such an admirable scheme will not fail in a city like Glasgow for lack of the necessary financial support.

In connection with the Scottish National Exhibition to be held in Glasgow in 1911, a choral festival and choir competition will take place on June 23 and 24. The arrangements are in the hands of a large and representative committee, with Mr. F. H. Bisset (Bishopton, Renfrewshire) as honorary secretary.

During the customary lull before the opening of the regular season in November, only a few concerts have taken place, among these being the first of the Harrison Concerts on October 12, at which Madame Tetrassini appeared, and the first of Mr. Henri Verbrugghen's Chamber Concerts on October 14. The Corporation organ recitals in the Art Galleries, as well as the City Hall Saturday evening concerts, have been resumed.

LIVERPOOL.

The winter season of the Philharmonic Society opened on October 11, when Dr. F. H. Cowen conducted Schumann's Symphony No. 4, in D minor (dedicated to Dr. Joachim). A delightful performance was given of Bach's 'Brandenburg' Concerto in G, in which Mr. Rawdon Briggs (violin) and Messrs. Needham and Redfern (flutes) played the solo parts. Instrumentally, of course, the chief interest centred in M. Sapellnikoff, whose reputation in Tchaikovsky's Piano-forte concerto in B flat minor (dedicated to Von Bülow) lost nothing by his magnificent playing on this occasion. The spirit of this brilliant conception, so remarkable for artistic continuity of expression throughout its three movements, was fully realised. Lyrical expression and delicacy, as well as extraordinary technique and strenuous vigour were also shown by M. Sapellnikoff in Chopin's Barcarolle and the Strauss-Tausig waltz, 'Man lebt mir einmal.' The dramatic baritone, M. Sammarco, was the vocalist, and the choir had their opportunity in Elgar's remarkable unaccompanied six-part chorus, 'Go, song of mine,' in which the singers did not appear wholly confident in certain places.

In the programmes of the Corporation free lectures, to be given at various centres during the winter season, it is announced that Mr. Ernest Young will lecture on 'Carl Loewe, a neglected great composer'; the Rev. H. H. McCullagh's subject is 'J. S. Bach,' with musical illustrations, vocal and instrumental. Madame Bertha Moore will herself vocally illustrate her lecture on 'Our National songs.' Mr. Albert Workman has chosen 'The life and works of Verdi,' and 'Sir Arthur Sullivan and his music.' The miscellaneous musical evenings will be enlivened by Mr. Michael O'Mahony's exposition of 'Samuel Lover' and 'Songs and their kindred,' and Mr. Ernest Young will deal with 'West-Country Folk-songs.' In the programmes of the lectures, which are distributed broadcast, useful particulars are given of books in the Reference Library, which are available to the public, and to students who desire further to pursue the subjects dealt with in the various lectures.

The opening of the Rushworth Hall on October 3, was signalled by two pianoforte recitals, given by Mr. Richard Buhlig. The acoustic qualities of the room were favourably commented upon, and fully tested in Mr. Buhlig's admirable performances, although he is a player whose qualities are more fitly associated with a larger locale.

A musically successful although insufficiently attended recital was given in the Philharmonic Hall on October 8, by Mr. Mark Hambourg and M. Zimbalist, assisted by Mlle. Alice Verlet, whom Mr. F. W. Sparrow accompanied. At the same hall, on October 15, a concert was given by the Victorian Court Orchestra of sixteen players, conducted by Mr. Gordon E. Stutely.

The St. Helen's Musical Society announce two concerts, at the first of which, on November 23, the first part of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Song of Hiawatha' will be sung, and Mr. Thomas Beecham will conduct several orchestral items. Residents naturally regard this visit of their distinguished fellow-townsmen with pleasurable interest. At the second concert, Sullivan's 'Golden Legend' is to be performed for the first time in this district.

In the cause of charity a successful performance of the Chester Pageant music was given in the Birkenhead Town Hall, by the Birkenhead contingent (seventy-five voices) of the Chester Pageant Choir, on October 13. A feature of the evening was the performance of the Chester Waits tunes and old country dances, played as pianoforte duets, by Professor J. C. Bridge (who conducted) and Mr. B. Sandberg Lee.

The Music Lectures Association in connection with the University Extension movement resumed its useful work on October 14 in the Liberty Buildings of the old Blue Coat School—a quaint old Liverpool building which, happily, is to be preserved—when Mr. Filson Young, the well-known novelist and musical critic, gave the first of a series of six lectures on 'The place of music in modern life.' He said that music was to-day a mature, fully evolved art, of the technique of which they knew practically everything that there was to be known. There was now a pause in its development. He did not believe that music could move with the times. Music was no time-server: it was an expression of the inner soul of man. The conditions of modern life were of a distracting, hurrying and unrestful character. Music was really less at home in our modern life than in the life of the generations that had passed. The great characteristic of English music in its best days was always its gaiety: it was never melancholy, savage or barbaric. The chief use of music in modern life was as a means of escape from modern life. It was less important to-day that we should produce new music than that we should create an atmosphere in which the music that had already been produced could be heard and enjoyed. There was a lack of listeners, rather than of performers and producers. He commended string quartet parties, choral societies and village brass-bands as valuable aids in cultivating a musical atmosphere.

The inaugural concert of the Symphony Orchestra's new series was successfully given in the Philharmonic Hall on October 18, before a large audience. An enjoyable novelty was Mr. Granville Bantock's 'Old English Suite,' an orchestral arrangement of five movements from Early-English writers, viz., Orlando Gibbons (Fantasia of Four Parts), John Dowland (Lachrymæ), Dr. John Bull (The King's Hunt), Giles Farnaby (Quodling's Delight), William Byrd (Selleger's Round). Professor Bantock has done notable service in thus directing attention to these delightful examples of early native art, which possess real musical value as well as antiquarian interest.

At the annual distribution of awards to students of the Liverpool College of Music, Mr. J. G. Legge, City Director of Education, presided. In commending the work done by the College, of which the annual report was read by Mr. H. E. Hunt, the chairman hoped that the time was not far distant when this deserving institution would be provided with suitable buildings and scholarships.

MANCHESTER AND DISTRICT.

The prospectus of the Hallé Concerts (issued early in October) is remarkable not so much for its announcements as for its omissions. In some departments of the city's artistic life—pictorial and dramatic—the progress of recent years has been almost radical, but the Hallé executive is incorrigibly conservative; their action at times seems to say 'This tide of progress must be stemmed.' For any interest they show, there might be no young English school; Holbrooke, Delius, Paul Corder, Hurlstone, Von Arn Carse, Ernest Austin, Havergal Brian, Frank Bridge, Ernest Bryson, Vaughan Williams, Hathaway, Harty, they might be babes unborn; yet any one of them has written vastly better stuff than the 'Sursum Corda' of Alexander Ritter, or the String suite of Enrico Bossi—two of last season's 'novelities' upon the production of which the chairman congratulated the subscribers at the annual meeting; (in passing it may be noted that the Ritter 'novelty' is twenty years old). Mercifully for the young British composer there are a few places in England where the powers-that-be are more wide-awake than here. What Manchester wants is some organization that will marshal its 'forward movement' strength—some society or club of concert-goers; let the thorough-going progressives band themselves together, shew their strength, and then speak with a collective voice.

At the annual meeting in June, the chairman of the Society alluded to the engagement of Van Rooy, also of a pending arrangement with Mr. Paderewski for his own appearance and production of his Symphony, but there is no mention of either of these in the prospectus; one looks in vain for the new Elgar Violin concerto. Parts II. and III. of Bantock's 'Omar' trilogy are to be given, and, at last, the 'Messiah' has yielded place to Bach's 'Christmas Oratorio.'

The four orchestral programmes of the Gentlemen's Concerts, to be conducted by Mr. Henry J. Wood, will introduce several works of the lighter order, quite new to Manchester. Liadoff's 'Baba-Yaga,' Massenet's Élégie from the 'Les Erinnyes' suite, and the ballet music from 'Le Cid,' new suites by Bach and Purcell, and the Rameau suite from 'Castor and Pollux'; Beethoven, Mendelssohn, and Mozart symphonies lending the necessary balance. Max Bruch's 'Frithjof,' for male chorus, will prove a most attractive work. The opportunities of hearing male-voice choral singing in association with orchestra are not too numerous.

In Manchester the season rarely gets under way until about the third week in October. The opening concerts of the three chief orchestral series can be dealt with to better advantage next month.

Much will be expected from the recent appointment of Mr. Herbert Whittaker to the conductorship of the Vocal Society, and it is generally anticipated that his connection with this old-established body (whose conductors' initials have always been H. W.) will have a marked influence on the technical equipment of choirs in the Manchester neighbourhood. At the 276th concert of the series on October 12, more modern music was given than would probably have been found in an entire season previously.

It was facetiously remarked at Colwyn Bay last September that (always save and except Mr. Lloyd George) Mr. Walter Nesbitt, conductor of the Manchester Orpheus Male-Voice Choir, was the best-known man in Wales, and a programme such as these eighty men submitted at their fourth annual concert on October 20 (proceeds to help them on their Rhineland tour next Whitsuntide), is, even to-day, a comparative rarity, and only a choir that has gone through the rigorous training of the competitive arena could have acquired that versatility and power of rapid mental adjustment to the changing emotional demands made by a programme of fifteen or twenty items, ranging from Hatton, Walmisley and Stainer, via Brahms and Cornelius to Bantock, Reger, Sibelius and Strauss. One often wonders at the feats of a Nicholls, a Coates, a Gerhardt, or a Willner in a lieder recital, but surely such recitals of modern works as this, and one to be given by Mr. Whittaker's Blackpool Choir at the Schiller-Anstalt in January, are infinitely more difficult, for each member of the choir must have an artistic temperament to start with, and then the conductor has to make them quickly responsive as four, six, or eight (as the case may be) greatly magnified solo voices, and that seems a still greater marvel. The soloists at this concert were Mrs. Herbert Hutchinson, Mr. Harold Wilde and Mr. Frederick Dawson.

The social side enters freely at the meetings of the Gentlemen's Glee Club, usually held at the Albion Hotel. Their seventy-seventh season commenced on October 4, the camp scene from Purcell's 'King Arthur,' and, in commemoration of the centenary, S. S. Wesley's 'The praise of music,' being included in the evening's programme.

Passing mention must be made of Mr. James Richardson's violoncello recital, which introduced new works by Rachmaninoff and Thomas F. Dunhill, and also a Schumann song-recital by Miss Muriel Robinson.

Music at the theatre has been provided by the Beecham light opera company in 'Tales of Hoffmann' and 'Die Fledermaus,' whilst at the Gaiety Theatre an unusual delight has been experienced in the recital of 'Enoch Arden,' with Strauss's music, made wondrously clear by Mr. F. Walter's playing, which was at once discreetly reticent, expressive, and imaginative; both he and Mr. Esmé Percy, the reciter, are to be most warmly congratulated.

The 'Nibelungen Ring' and 'Elektra' scheme looks rather more feasible, and the guarantee list is being kept open until the end of October.

In the artizan neighbourhood of Ancoats, Mr. T. W. Surette is lecturing on the works of Brahms, and Mr. Egon Petri has most generously promised to play the Beethoven Sonatas (chronologically) on six Monday evenings up to Christmas, the charge for admission being only sixpence.

It is our unpleasant duty to record that the prolonged depression in the Lancashire cotton industry, occasioned by scarcity of raw material, has caused grave anxiety to the town choral societies; only the generous aid of public-spirited enthusiasts has kept them afloat.

Dr. E. C. Bairstow's societies in Blackburn and Preston are next spring once more to co-operate in the 'Dream of Gerontius.' Mr. Herbert Whittaker's Bolton Choral Union unite with the Oldham Orchestral Society again, conducted by Mr. Frederick Dawson, a collaboration which was highly successful last season. At Southport, Mr. Charles Brumm has arranged a splendid series of chamber-concerts: Kreisler, Madame Agnes Nicholls, Johanne Stockmarr, Elena Gerhardt and the Brussels String Quartet appearing at successive concerts. Baron d'Erlanger has promised to write some new songs for the second concert on December 2.

NEWCASTLE AND DISTRICT.

The chief theme of discussion in musical circles at present is the possibility of a performance of the 'Ring' and 'Elektra' in April. Herr Denhof announces that £3,500 will be needed for the Wagner, and £800 for the Strauss, in order to cover expenses. The Tyne-mouth Vocal Society will give Handel's 'Judas Maccabæus' in December, and the Monkseaton Choral Society (under the direction of their new conductor, Mr. H. Yeaman Dodds) Mendelssohn's 'Lorelei' and a miscellaneous programme. The first and last concerts of the Middlesbrough Musical Union will bring forth Elgar's 'Black Knight,' Goetz's 'Nœnia,' Beethoven's 'Emperor' concerto (soloist, Miss Tina Lerner), and Bach's 'St. John' Passion. The second will be mostly occupied by chamber music for wind instruments: Schumann's Romances for oboe and pianoforte, Mozart's Andante and Finale for flute and pianoforte, Saint-Saëns's Caprice for flute, oboe and pianoforte, Brahms's Clarinet sonata, and Goeplart's Trio for flute, oboe and pianoforte. The artists will be Mr. W. A. Fransella (flute), Mr. H. de Busscher (oboe), Mr. C. Fawcett (clarinet), and Mr. Hamilton Hartly (pianoforte). Señor Casals's violoncello playing in a Bach Suite, in Beethoven and in Brahms's Sonatas, at a concert of the Classical Concerts Society on October 17, was a remarkably fine combination of intellect, passion and technique. Mr. F. S. Kelly was excellent in the Sonatas, but in his Chopin pianoforte solos revealed a lack of sympathy. Madame Tétrazini charmed a large audience at the first Harrison concert on October 19.

SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

The Sheffield Grand Opera Society, a body originally formed for the purpose of augmenting the Moody-Manners Opera Company during their visits to Sheffield, embarked on a bold experiment in the early days of October. The principal theatre was engaged for a week, and three performances each of Verdi's 'Aida' and Gounod's 'Faust' were staged and performed entirely by amateurs! Experience gained in association with the touring company named had given the bulk of the members a sense of the stage, and supplemented by the admirable vocal and managerial training and conducting of Mr. J. Duffell, resulted in performances of considerable merit. The soloists, drawn from the ranks of the Society, sang and acted in most instances with confidence and resource. 'Aida' in particular was extremely well done, the spectacle and the chorus-singing being praiseworthy features of the performances.

The Victoria Hall Choral Society, a body numbering some 300 choristers and possessing an associated orchestral branch, opened a busy season's programme on October 9 with a performance of the 'Hymn of Praise,' conducted by Mr. H. C. Jackson.

Miss Lily Foxon and Mr. George Ellenberger gave an enjoyable recital of sonatas for violin and pianoforte on October 10. They were happily associated in Cesar Franck's beautiful work in A, and also gave a carefully studied interpretation of Brahms's second Sonata in A. Miss Foxon played Beethoven's Pastoral Sonata very neatly and expressively. Mr. R. Charlesworth was the vocalist.

Other vocal and instrumental recitals of notable interest were also given during the month by Miss Myrtle Lumsden and Mr. Edgar Bainton, and by Miss Florence Brook and Mr. Allen Smith.

The month's concerts also included visits from Dr. Richter and the Hallé Orchestra, and Madame Tétrazini and concert party.

Foreign Notes.

AIX-LES-BAINS.

A musical week formed part of the festivities which recently took place to commemorate the fiftieth anniversary of the reunion of the Savoy province with France. It commenced with a concert given under the direction of M. Julien Tiersot, at which the programme included the Apothéose from Berlioz's 'Symphonie funèbre et triomphale,' Gossec's 'Chant du 14. Juillet,' and folk-songs and dances arranged and edited by the conductor. On the following day Saint-Saëns's opera 'Proserpine' (of which the rehearsals had been supervised by the composer) was given with great success. The week, which included several other features of interest, was terminated with a fine performance of Wagner's 'Meistersinger,' given under the baton of M. Leon Jehin, from Monte Carlo.

ANTWERP.

Both the French and Flemish operas are now again in full activity. At the latter institution, Heinrich Zöllner's opera 'Fritjof' was successfully produced on October 6. The opera is one of the composer's early works, but has been specially revised for this production.

BAMBERG.

Edgar Tinell's oratorio 'Die heilige Katharina von Alexandrien' made a deep impression on the occasion of its recent performance in the Michaelskirche.

BARMEN.

Among the interesting orchestral works to be performed for the first time in Barmen at the concerts of the Allgemeine Konzertverein, are Liszt's symphonic-poem 'Mazeppa,' Richard Strauss's 'Ein Heldenleben,' and Elgar's Variations.

BERLIN.

On September 25, Professor Karl Klindworth celebrated his eightieth birthday. He has been in his day a highly accomplished pianist and conductor, and he is mainly known to the younger generation by his pianoforte scores of Wagner's music-dramas, and his excellent editions of the pianoforte works of Chopin, Beethoven, Bach, Mendelssohn, &c.—Professor Engelbert Humperdinck has composed incidental music to Maeterlinck's fairy-drama 'The blue bird,' which is to be given this autumn at the Deutsches Theater.—The season's great Symphony concerts were commenced by the Königliche Kapelle, who, on October 3, gave their first concert at the Neues Königliche Opern Theater. Under the baton of Dr. Richard Strauss, three classical symphonies were played to perfection.—Beethoven's second 'Leonora' Overture, the new symphonic prologue to Hugo von Hoffmannsthal's 'Der Tor und der Tod,' by August Reuss, Schumann's C major Symphony, and three songs from Sir Walter Scott's 'Lady of the Lake,' by Schubert, orchestrated by Henry J. Wood (soloist, Madame Julia Culp), constituted the interesting programme of the first Philharmonic concert, given on October 10, under the conductorship of Professor Arthur Nikisch.—The organist of the Dresdener Kreuzkirche, Herr Alfred Sittard, gave an organ recital at the Blüthnersaal on October 1. His programme included two interesting Organ sonatas, in F sharp minor and D minor, by Max Reger.—At the Royal Opera, Miss Geraldine Farrar has made her annual appearance and achieved her usual success, particularly in Massenet's 'Manon.'

BRUSSELS.

At the Théâtre Royal de la Monnaie two gala performances of Puccini's 'La Bohème,' with Mesdames Alda and Bella Alten and Messrs. Caruso and Amato in the leading parts, were given during the last week of September, with colossal success. A few days afterwards the same composer's 'La Tosca' was also presented, with Mlle. Edyth de Lys and Signor Amato in the cast.

COLOGNE.

Many interesting works have been given at the Municipal Opera house since the beginning of the season. Among those deserving special mention were revivals of Nicolai's 'Die lustigen Weiber von Windsor,' Goldmark's 'Die Königin von Saba,' Massenet's 'Akte,' and 'A bassa porto' by the late Spinelli.

COPENHAGEN.

On September 25, Leo Blech's comic opera 'Forsegleet' was given for the first time at the Royal Theatre. The work had a friendly reception, but is hardly likely to prove a lasting acquisition to the repertoire. On the same occasion a new ballet 'Askepot' (Cinderella), arranged by Madame Walbom from H. C. Andersen's fairy-tale, with music by Professor Otto Malling (principal of the Royal Conservatoire of Music) was produced with success. At the Dagmartheatre a series of performances of opéra-comique have been inaugurated with an excellent representation of Adam's 'Konge for en Dag.' The principal part was sung and acted to perfection by Herr Vilhelm Herold, who has often appeared successfully in the Wagnerian repertoire at Covent Garden. Many attentions were bestowed upon the Norwegian composer, Johan Svendsen, who, on September 30, became seventy years of age. The artist, besides being an excellent composer, was a really great conductor. He occupied for more than twenty-five years—as conductor of the opera and the concerts of the Royal Orchestra—the leading position in Danish musical life, on the development of which he has exercised a highly beneficial influence.

DRESDEN.

The well-known composer, Professor Felix Draeseke, celebrated his seventy-fourth birthday on October 7. Music occupied an important position in connection with the recent inauguration of the new Rathaus. In the presence of King Friedrich August the Kreuzchor sang Bach's motet 'Singe dem Herrn ein neues Lied,' and in the following vesper the same master's 'Rathswahl' cantata, No. 29, 'Wir danken dir Gott' was performed. On the same occasion the old custom of 'Turmbblasen' (music from the tower) was revived. Under the direction of Königlicher Musikdirektor Otto Richter, the following interesting programme was rendered from the tower of the Rathaus, viz., Hans Leo Haslers (a former Court organist at Dresden) chorale 'Wo Gott zum Haus mit gibt sein Gunst' (composed 1610), Heinrich Schütz's (formerly Kursächsischer Hofkapellmeister) 'O Herr, hilf o Herr lass wohlgehungeln,' Symphonia sacra (May 16, 1651), Sonata for two 'choruses' (Cori spezzati) 'Per cantar o per sonar' (to be sung or played), by Giovanni Gabrieli (1587), Johann Sebastian Bach's (Kursächsischer Hofkomponist) Hymnus from the cantata (Drama per musica) 'Auf schmetternd Töne der munteren Trompeten,' dedicated to King August the Third (about 1733), and Sachsenlied 'Gott sei mit dir mein Sachsenland,' by Julius Otto.

DÜSSELDORF.

Leoncavallo's 'Zaza' has been the first novelty given at the Municipal Theatre this season. The concert season was most successfully inaugurated by the Sheffield Choir.

FRANKFURT.

On September 18 a new opera, 'Liebele,' by Franz Neumann, was produced with great success at the Opera House. Arthur Schnitzler's play 'Liebele' constitutes (in almost unaltered form) the libretto of the new work which, though not the creation of a great original mind, contains much beautiful and cleverly-written music.

HAMBURG.

The great event of the operatic season has so far been the performance of Wagner's trilogy 'Der Ring des Nibelungen,' under the direction of Herr Arthur Nikisch.

LAUSANNE.

On his seventy-fifth birthday, on October 9, Dr. Camille Saint-Saëns gave a sacred concert at the Cathedral, when he played in wonderful style some of his own organ works, including the Fantasia and the 'Bénédictio nuptiale.' The proceedings terminated with a performance of the composer's excellent 'Oratorio de Noël.'

MUNICH.

The French musical festival organized by a German committee and the 'Société française des amis de la musique' commenced on September 19, at the great Concert Hall of the Exhibition. Three orchestral concerts and two chamber-music performances were given. Among the interesting works played were Saint-Saëns's third Symphony in C minor, his Septet with trumpet, the Violoncello sonata, and the second Pianoforte trio. César Franck was represented with his noble D minor Symphony and the Symphonic Variations for pianoforte and orchestra, excellently rendered by M. Alfred Cortot, who also played the pianoforte part in Vincent d'Indy's symphony 'Sur un chant montagnard.' A very interesting orchestral suite, 'Pelléas and Mélisande,' by Gabriel Fauré, as well as some of the same composer's chamber music, were also heard. Among the works of the younger generation of French composers were Dukas's beautiful prelude to the third act of 'Ariane et Barbe bleue,' Ravel's curious Spanish rhapsody, and Debussy's three wonderfully original orchestral nocturnes. Dr. Saint-Saëns, who was present (and played the pianoforte parts of his own chamber music) was accorded enthusiastic ovations. The orchestral part was taken by the Münchener Tonkünstler-Orchester, and among the soloists were Mesdames Rose Féart and Wanda Landowska (who gave charming performances of old French music on the clavecin), and M. Widor. M. Rhené-Baton proved himself a highly accomplished conductor. Under the direction of Herr Felix Mottl, special performances of Berlioz's opera 'Benvenuto Cellini' and Richard Strauss's 'Elektra' were given at the Royal Opera in honour of the distinguished French guests, who were also socially much fêted. The whole festival was preceded by a civic reception by the burgomaster at the Rathaus.

ST. PETERSBURG.

At the recent competitions for the Rubinstein prize, the young English pianist and composer, Frank Merrick, was awarded a diploma for composition.

VALPARAISO.

A fine performance of Pergolesi's 'Stabat Mater' was given on June 23 in the German Church, under the direction of Mr. Henry Hill, and repeated on July 8.

The following candidates have passed the examination in voice-culture and class-singing held at the Royal Academy of Music in September: Walter Bains, Florence Mary Clifford Bradfield, Ethel Chapman, Alfred J. Collier, Bessie Furze, Edith E. Jackson, Helena Beatrice Mary Jesson, Henry McCleary, Elizabeth Sarah Alice Murphy, Jean Nicoll, Sister Cecilia, Edith M. G. Reed, Jessie M. Soga. The examiners were Dr. H. W. Richards and Dr. McNaught.

Owing to a difficulty in making satisfactory arrangements, the proposed performance by the London Choral Society of Dr. Cowen's new work 'The Veil' (which made such a deep impression at the Cardiff festival) has been abandoned. The first London performance will, however, take place early in the New Year under as nearly as possible the same conditions which obtained at Cardiff, Dr. Cowen himself conducting.

The prospectus of the Muswell Hill Philharmonic Society (conductor, Mr. Robert Carrodus) gives a list of works from which the season's programmes will be chosen. The symphonies enumerated are Beethoven's in A, Brahms's in C minor, Goldmark's 'Rustic wedding,' Kalinnikoff's in G minor.

Sir Alexander Mackenzie's 'Dream of Jubal,' with Mr. Charles Fry as the Narrator, will form the chief attraction at the concert given by the Newport Choral Society on November 24. Leoni's 'The Gate of Life' is down for performance on March 30. The conductor is Mr. Arthur E. Sims. The 'Dream of Jubal' has also been chosen by the Bruton Choral Society for performance on May 11.

With a balance in hand of 15s. 6d. the organizers of the South Place Sunday Popular Concerts have arranged to continue their excellent work during the present season. They opened with a Schumann Centenary Concert on October 2. The summary of their work of last season contains an impressive list of well-known artists and compositions.

The annual balance sheet of the Philharmonic Society reveals a loss on the season's work. Subscriptions amounted to £1,152 10s.; the takings at the concerts supplied £591 11s. 6d., and other sources brought the total income up to £2,472 17s. 6d. The expenditure amounted to £2,542 16s. 3d., of which £1,535 11s. 6d. was paid to the soloists and orchestra.

The Berkhamsted Church Choral Society are rehearsing 'Judas Maccabæus,' Hubert Bath's 'Wedding of Shon Maclean,' Elgar's 'Go, song of mine,' for the coming season. The Chesham Choral Society are undertaking Gounod's 'Faust' (concert version) and Stanford's 'Revenge.' Both Societies are conducted by Mr. William H. London.

While touring in Germany as one of the soloists with the Sheffield Choir, Mr. Webster Millar had the misfortune to lose an overcoat containing his pocket-diary wherein all his engagements were entered. He would be grateful if provincial Societies with whom he is booked would be good enough to write to him confirming the engagements.

The Woking Musical Society, consisting of a choir and orchestra under the direction of Mr. Patrick White, will put 'Hiawatha' and 'Elijah' into rehearsal for performance during the coming season.

The Belfast Select Male Choir, conducted by Mr. Herbert F. Ellingford, will perform Cornelius's 'The old soldier's dream,' Hegar's 'The phantom host,' and other part-songs during the season.

The receipts of the recent York Festival amounted to £1,331 16s. The payments, of which the orchestra and principals received £756 8s. 6d., amounted to £1,331 9s. 7d., leaving a balance of 6s. 5d.

On September 24, at the Highbury Athenæum, the Mayor of Islington opened a modern school of music, established by Mr. Isidor Epstein.

The Chelmsford Choral Society (conductor, Mr. Frederick R. Frye) give their first concert on December 13, with Walthew's 'The Pied Piper of Hamelin.'

The annual general meeting of the Music Teachers' Association was held at the Royal Academy of Music on October 20.

At an orchestral concert given at Newport on October 13, Miss Valerie Richards made her début.

BRIEFLY SUMMARIZED.

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed in this summary, as the notices are either prepared from local newspapers or furnished by correspondents.

Correspondents are particularly requested to enclose a programme when forwarding reports of concerts.

ENFIELD.—A concert arranged by Miss G. Mare was given at the Bycullah Athenæum, on October 12, before a large audience. Miss Mare's songs and other items were encored. The songs by Miss Elsie Tracey, Miss Mary Clark, Mr. John Lincoln Smith, Mr. Thirkettle, and the violin solos by Miss Elsie Avril, were much enjoyed. Others taking part were: Master Ernest Pitcher, pianoforte solos; Miss Jennie Pipkin (recitation), Mr. John Rasberry, Misses K. and G. Smith.—At a 'United Choirs Festival' held in this building on September 28, Mr. A. L. Cowley's 'The Harvest Covenant,' was performed under the composer's direction. Fourteen churches and other organizations in the neighbourhood sent contingents to the choir, which, with the orchestra, numbered over 250 performers.

PORTSMOUTH.—A concert of sacred music was given by the choir of the Elm Grove Baptist Church, Southsea, on October 19, when Dr. Stainer's cantata, 'The daughter of Jairus' was performed. The choir, numbering about fifty voices, sang with admirable taste and precision, and reflected great credit on their conductor; whilst the orchestra, led by Mr. A. E. Harfield, rendered efficient service. The second part of the programme included Mendelssohn's 'Hear my prayer' and selections from Sullivan's 'Prodigal son.' The soloists were Miss Marjorie Blessley, Mr. William Guard, and Mr. Charles Wassell. Mr. H. C. Morrell, the organist and choirmaster, conducted.

READING.—Mr. Charles J. Bishenden gave the first of a series of six weekly lectures and song-concerts on October 5, at Cross Street Hall. To an audience that included teachers and children from the University Committee of Education, Sunday Schools, &c., he explained his original method for 'Voice, singing and health.'

ST. JOHN'S, NEWFOUNDLAND.—Highly artistic aims are indicated in the programme of the concert organized by Mr. Alfred H. Allen and given on September 22. Mr. Allen's organ solos were chosen from Bach and his pianoforte solos from Chopin; Miss Sybil Johnston played Beethoven's F major Violin sonata and G major Romance, and music of the best class was undertaken by the vocalists, Miss Elsie Herder, Miss Beatrice Story, Miss Jean Strang, Mr. Frank Seymour and Mr. P. J. McCarthy. The programme was well carried out, and the artists' efforts were appreciated.

Answers to Correspondents.

HATTON.—Sir George Martin's primer on Choir-boy Training (in Novello's Primer Series) and Dr. McNaught's 'Hints on Choir training' (Novello), a small pamphlet, price 2d., may be of use to you. An important book on the subject will, we believe, be published next year.

H. A.—Loud singing may indeed strengthen certain muscles, but it will not necessarily lead to good tone or even that control which is dependent upon a balance of forces.

F. D.—We do not know of any published analyses of Beethoven's Violin sonatas, beyond what may be found in old Monday Popular Concert programmes.

SESQUIALTERA.—There are very few lending libraries for music. We know of none in your district. Novello & Co. have an extensive one, as you are probably aware.

A. L. U. asks where a carol with words beginning 'From out the spacious firmament' can be found.

'MOTTLANDS.'—We regret we cannot give the information.

Many answers are held over or have been answered privately.

THE MUSICAL

A LIBRARY OF INSTRUCTION IN MUSIC

WRITTEN BY EXPERTS.

FIRST PAYMENT, 1s. 6d.

The aim of "The Musical Educator" is to supply in compact and interesting form a complete and systematic musical education.

We would especially draw attention to the following names of Leaders in the Musical World, and of the subjects for which they are responsible. The practical value of these sections will be apparent to all students and professors of music and singing.

MARK HAMBOURG, "The Piano and how to Play it."

EDWIN H. LEMARE, "The Art of Organ Playing."

JOHN DUNN, "On Playing the Violin."

DR. F. H. COWEN, "The Art of Conducting."

Course of Voice Training, Singing, and Solfeggio. Course on the Pianoforte. Course on the Violin. Positions illustrated by Diagrams and Photographs. Course on Harmonium, American Organ, and on the Organ. Lessons on Scientific Basis of Music. Lessons on Rudiments of Music. Course on Harmony and Counterpoint. Lessons in Canon and Fugue. Lessons in Musical Forms, Musical Analysis and Composition. Dictionary of Musical Terms.
Articles on the Instruments used in the Orchestras and in Military Bands. History of Music. Biographical Dictionary of Musicians. Articles on Children's Music and Musical Drill. Articles on Choir Training and Conducting. Article on Congregational Music. Article on Musical Degrees and Education. Article on Nationality in Music.

ITS VALUE TO THE TEACHER.

In "The Musical Educator" every section is dealt with by an expert. Its value to the teacher of music is obvious, because it shows the way—at once simple and lucid—in which some of the greatest of musical professors would set about the instruction of a pupil anxious to perfect himself in his particular department, whether it be that of the piano, the violin, the harp, or any other instrument, or of any department of singing.

Add to this its all-round value as a standard work of reference on every point concerning the wide domain of music and musicians, and it will be granted that "The Musical Educator" is unique as well as complete.

TWO OPINIONS.

Sir J. FREDERICK BRIDGE.

"'The Musical Educator' is full of useful information plainly set forth. The musical illustrations are excellent."

Dr. CRESER, Mus.D. Oxon, F.R.C.O., F.T.C.L.

(Examiner in Music at Trinity College), writes:-

"We have here an illuminative work of great value, not only to the student, but also to the general reader.

... It contains excellent instructions."

2. BARLEY-BREAK Anonymous
3. LOVE IS A SICKNESS Samuel Daniel
4. GOLDEN SLUMBERS Thomas Dekker
5. SUMMER SPORTS Thomas Dekker

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE.
String Parts, 7s. ; Wind Parts and Full Score, MS.

THE TIMES.

The only other work which requires special mention is Dr. Brewer's charming Suite of five Old English songs for chorus and orchestra; . . . all five are full of lightness and grace, delicate little pieces of vocal writing set off with piquant orchestration.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Dr. Brewer's Suite was brought to its first hearing, and mightily pleased the majority of the audience, . . . It is a breezy little composition, well laid out for not too ambitious choral societies, its music is always in perfectly good taste, now and then it is full of a genuine and very dainty grace, as in the pretty chorus for mixed voices, "Love is a sickness full of woes," and the delicious sixteenth century lullaby, "Golden slumbers kiss your eyes," which is written for female voices only, and always it is clean and wholesome, and unexpecting in its demands upon the singers. Clearly, then, it justifies its existence. The Suite went very well, under Dr. Brewer's guidance, the composer at the close being repeatedly recalled.

MORNING POST.

The numbers are singularly happy compositions, highly charged with old-world grace, but devised with a full knowledge of modern requirements, and their popularity is likely to be great, if their reception may be taken as any augury.

STANDARD.

The same fancy and imagination which characterise the composer's pastoral songs play round this delightful series of vignettes of Merrie England. The music, with its breezy lightness and delicate orchestral texture, suggests the playtime of Corydon and Phyllis amid the bowers of Arcady. Of the five numbers, the most striking are "Barley-Break," written in the style of the Elizabethan madrigalists, for male voices; and "Golden Slumbers," for female voices, a charming and seductive lullaby, daintily scored and very effective with its muted strings accompaniment and its melody and rhythmic sense. The last number, "Summer Sports," from which the Suite takes its name, is the most elaborate. The score graphically describes the hunt, and the bustle and excitement of the chase are cleverly suggested in the rush and life of the music. The whole work, which was finely performed and enthusiastically received, forms a little gallery of pastoral pictures of the old time, and admirably reflects the sentiment of the sixteenth century poets, the spirit of whose verses Dr. Brewer has so happily caught.

YORKSHIRE POST.

It is eminently tuneful, daintily orchestrated, and as thoroughly English as the words. The Suite was sung by the Gloucester contingent of the chorus with admirable spirit, and had a very pleasant and exhilarating effect. There is a distinct place for such music, which, without attempting to scale ambitious heights, is artistic and agreeable, and there is no doubt that "Summer Sports" will have a good vogue with choral societies, as indeed it well deserves.

BRISTOL TIMES.

The composition is the best of the kind Dr. Brewer has written. His music is always bright, melodious, straight-forward, clear in design, and captivating. In this example these features are forthcoming in their best degree, and the musical equipment of every poem hits off in the most apt and enchanting manner the sentiments. Directed by the author, the choir and band gave a fine illustration of the work. They grasped the spirit of the poems and music, entered with zest into their portrayal, and helped to make "Summer Sports" a triumphant success.

MANCHESTER COURIER.

Grace, refinement, and charm are the characteristics of "Summer Sports," and as the little work cannot unduly tax the powers of any moderately proficient choir, we prophesy for it an immediate and wide popularity.

THE TEN VIRGINS

FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA

BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

"Will be heartily welcomed by all who love the art of music."

—Newcastle Journal.

"The work will certainly go through Saxondom in the wake of its predecessors from the same pen."—London Daily Telegraph.

"Must attain popularity wherever heard, and will assuredly be placed among the foremost compositions of this kind by present-day writers . . . treated in a thoroughly artistic manner . . . a perfect wealth of melody and striking individuality of style."—Liverpool Daily Courier.

"Works which have placed him in the front rank of English composers—the 'Holy City,' 'Joan of Arc,' and 'The Ten Virgins.'"—Newcastle Daily Journal.

"The choral writing in 'The Ten Virgins' is alone something to be thankful for, and, as we have intimated, it is only one of the many musical virtues of the Cantata."—Leamington Chronicle.

"Bow and Bromley Institute Choir.—The hall was overcrowded by an audience that was disposed to encore every other number of the work. That Mr. Gaul should have secured this undoubted popular success with a work far more contrapuntal than any of his former works is a remarkable tribute to his power of welding science and beauty into one whole."

—The Musical Times.

"The subject is an excellent one for a Cantata . . . a stronger work than 'Joan of Arc.' Melodious, vocal, and of moderate difficulty, and, like Mr. Gaul's earlier Cantatas, will be eagerly welcomed by societies in search of new works having these characteristics."—Newcastle Daily Leader.

"That 'The Ten Virgins' is a much finer work than the everywhere favourite 'Holy City' we have no doubt whatever. Mr. Gaul has aimed at fine outline and telling colouring, and all that he has aimed at he has achieved."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

Price, paper cover, 2s. 6d. ; paper boards, 3s. ; cloth, gilt 4s.
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. ; Vocal Parts, each, 1s. ; Words only, 5s. per 100.

Performed by the Birmingham Festival Choral Society.

JOAN OF ARC

FOR THREE SOLO VOICES, CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA

MUSIC BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

"Few Cantatas are as rich in chaste melodies, charming choruses, and exquisite orchestration as Alfred R. Gaul's 'Joan of Arc,' performed for the first time in Plymouth by the Vocal Association in the Guildhall."

—The Western News.

"Must enhance the high reputation of its composer."—Liverpool Courier.

"The inspiration of a highly-refined musician. . . . The Cantata is even a more masterly and beautiful work than 'The Holy City.'"—Huddersfield Examiner.

"No more charming Cantata than 'Joan of Arc' could have been chosen. It abounds in delicious music. There is not a tedious note in it."—Newcastle-on-Tyne Daily Chronicle.

"Gives the listener a vivid and realistic impression, its attractiveness being continuous instead of spasmodic."—Bradford Observer.

"The Exeter Oratorio Society last night achieved a brilliant success, and it may safely be said, without fear of exaggeration, that never before have they performed a work more satisfactory to themselves or more interesting to the audience than 'Joan of Arc.'"—Western Times.

"One of the most delightful Concerts ever given by the South Shields Choral Society was that of last evening, when the principal piece was 'Joan of Arc.' We cannot speak too highly of Mr. Gaul's work, which is of the most interesting description."—The Shields Daily News.

Price, paper cover, 2s. 6d. ; paper boards, 3s. ; scarlet cloth, 4s.
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. ; Vocal parts, each, 1s. ; Words only, 7s. 6d. per 100.
(Ent. Stationers' Hall.)

The loan of instrumental parts may be had on application to the Composer, and full liberty is given to perform these Cantatas and to insert the words in any programme without further permission.

THE VEIL

POEM

BY

ROBERT BUCHANAN

SET TO MUSIC FOR SOLI, CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA

BY

FREDERIC H. COWEN.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS.

Paper Boards, 3s. 6d.; Cloth, gilt, 5s.; String Parts, 12s. 6d.; Wind Parts and Full Score, MS.

THE TIMES.

It was quite clear that the work made a deep impression upon the audience; for the applause during its course and at the end was evidently the result of real appreciation, and not merely what was due to the popular conductor of the festival. The appreciation was well deserved; there are points of genuine beauty in every number, and the earnestness of the whole conception and the skill with which it has been carried out place the composer in a stronger light than anything which he has yet written.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

It is a genuine pleasure to record that the very large audience was filled with an enthusiasm that knew no bounds. Recall of the composer followed recall in the charming concert-room. . . . Dr. Cowen has risen to heights at least as lofty as those reached by the poet whose muse attracted him. . . . I would go further, and say that he has risen higher. . . . Dr. Cowen, true to himself, has surpassed himself, and many are the lovely passages in his most recent production.

STANDARD.

Dr. Cowen's festival novelty, "The Veil," which was heard for the first time, is the most ambitious and notable composition the composer has made to the literature of music. . . . Early in the first part we catch a glimpse of his felicity of expression in the tenor solo, "Now an Evangel," which in its sense of compassion makes an immediate appeal. . . . "Earth the mother," with its somewhat Elgareque influence and feeling, is one of the most eloquent sections. . . . The second part, "The Dream of the World without Death," is ushered in by some pregnant orchestral strains, and it is this section that went a long way to-night to establish the success of the work. The contralto solo, with its note of tender solicitude, mingled with passionate questionings, comes nearer to genuine inspiration than any other portion of the scene. . . . The duet between the Soul and the Body is probably the one that will go furthest in establishing the popularity of the work. . . . The work met with a great reception, and deservedly so, for it is, in depth of feeling, in width of design, and in imagination, the greatest and best thing that Dr. Cowen has given us.

MORNING LEADER.

Its sincerity was clear, and its success was undeniable. . . . It proved to be essentially modern in conception, and its qualities in this respect were heightened by the absence of any traces of foreign, as distinct from British influence. It belongs to the same school as the "Dream of Gerontius," and it can claim a high place among the recent output of choral work of a distinctively national type. The interest of the work occasionally rose to great heights. . . . The general idea of mankind intently seeking to penetrate the mysteries of the unknown was excellently conveyed, and a still better effect was obtained in those sections where intense and tragical expression was called for. Altogether it was clear that in this music the composer has made a notable addition to choral literature, and has shown himself ready to adopt the British style of abstract expression.

DAILY NEWS.

There are several happy imaginative touches. . . . Among these the most noticeable was the contralto's song, in which a mother bewails the loss of her children, which is a beautiful and impressive composition. Again, Dr. Cowen has been inspired in the song of the Watcher at the deathbed. It is for baritone, and has real poignancy and beauty. One could continue to point out this and that beauty in the work, but the mere mention of solos will convey nothing to the reader who has not heard and does not know "The Veil." It must be enough to say that Dr. Cowen has written a work which contains many surprising beauties, and that, if it falls short of being a masterpiece, it is certainly a most interesting contribution to native art.

MORNING POST.

The success with which he presents his thoughts is a tribute to his intellectual powers, and helps to make the work a remarkable production. . . . There is a highly successful effort in the creation of atmosphere at the commencement of the "Dream of the World without Death," with the scene of the Watcher, and the orchestral colouring is excellent. . . . The sequential description by the Mother of the loss of her two children possesses great pathos, and the chorus that concludes this section has a breadth and an originality that might well have been maintained. . . . The duet [between the Soul and the Body] has a lyrical character that fully represents Dr. Cowen's powers of writing graceful and pleasing music. . . . The best effect is secured at its close, in which the Chorus have a share, and here the construction and colouring are masterly in their grace and tenderness. The Song of the Seeker does not in itself indicate that the special manner has been maintained, and the impression made was by means of the choral appeal for the removal of the Veil. It is here that the work reaches its climax, and with so much conviction that the audience burst into spontaneous applause when it reached a point of apparent termination. . . . The Vision of the Divine Presence is described in hushed, spoken sentences, and the work comes to a calm end with the awakening of the Seeker and the close of the vision.

YORKSHIRE POST.

"The Veil" strikes one first of all as a remarkably able and thoughtful treatment of a noble and inspiring theme, and it shows not merely the power to provide fitting music for the text, but a sense of proportion and of the value of contrast that is of the greatest possible service in enhancing and holding the hearer's attention. The weird chromatic progressions by which it is sought to express the mystical atmosphere of a great portion of the poem are relieved by the tender mood of the section entitled "Earth the mother," and again by the simple and appealing pathos of the episode in which the mother is bereft of her children. This had the advantage of being sung by Madame Kirkby Lunn, whose consummate art has never been more strikingly displayed, for she obtained an effect of the deepest emotion without the least suspicion of exaggeration, but with a reticence which enhanced the sincerity of the performance not easily forgotten by those who heard it. But only her rightful share must be allowed the executant for a result which she could not have produced had not the same sincerity been discoverable in the music, which, to my mind, places Dr. Cowen on a still higher plane than he has ever occupied hitherto. Another very beautiful scene is the duet for soprano and tenor, a love scene of an exalted type, breathing an emotion which is not merely sensuous, yet has a note of passion mingled with its strains. A happy idea is where the lifting of the Veil is told by the contraltos and basses with the spoken voice, the effect of which at the central point of a great musical work is most striking.

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.

His music is essentially vivid. Much use is made of leading themes, and that which is associated with the idea of the Veil is especially striking. . . . The dream scene, in which the mother bewails, not the death, but the sudden disappearance of her children, is astonishingly powerful, and with the part of the mother filled by Madame Kirkby Lunn, it provided the point of supreme interest in the whole cantata. . . . The most cumulative effect occurs towards the end of the work. It is very massive and imposing. . . . The work was greeted with well-judged enthusiasm, and Dr. Cowen was called upon several times to acknowledge the applause.

BIRMINGHAM DAILY POST.

When all deductions have been made there remains a quantity of very impressive and touching music, and music with a good deal of genuine humanity in it. It was received with great enthusiasm.

As its name implies, this book is designed for use with, and not in place of, other Church Hymnals.

For this reason the Hymns are numbered from 801, so that the numbers may not interfere with the use of any other hymn book, no other Church hymn book having as many as even seven hundred hymns. Each hymn has its own distinctive tune, and no hymn or tune in this work is found in Hymns Ancient and Modern (Old Edition), so that with the two books no duplication occurs.

P. TOTTENHAM LUCAS.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence net.

"This charming little piece, composed for an ordinary School Concert at Bilton Grange last year, was last Term successfully produced at a Students' Concert at Trinity College of Music. It is really melodious and well-written, and deserves to be heard at Chamber Concerts generally."—The Organist and Choirmaster, September, 1910.

MARIO LORENZI, the Italian Boy Harpist (of whom the Daily Telegraph says that his technique on the Harp is as mature as Mischka Elman's on the Violin), writes as follows:—

"I found your Trio and I will play it with great pleasure."

Played by M. C. BUTLER, Esq. (Erard Harp Scholar, R.A.M.) at his Lecture on "The Harp, and how to write for it."

THE VICAR OF BRAY

VARIATIONS

FOR STRING ORCHESTRA

COMPOSED BY

ERNEST AUSTIN.

(Op. 35.)

STRING PARTS, 6s.; PIANOFORTE SOLO, 2s. 6d.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Mr. Austin shows ready employment of orchestral means, and his nine Variations are well wrought and effective. Very expressive is the third, a slow movement in two sections, and its successor, a crisp and lively Scherzo, engages the ear in thoroughly legitimate fashion. . . . A spirited close is provided to a decidedly meritorious and resourceful work, which so took the fancy of the audience that they twice summoned Mr. Austin to the platform and warmly applauded him.

MORNING POST.

The Variations, performed for the first time, created an immediate impression. . . . They indeed make high claims to be regarded as a classic. They are certain to be popular because, with all their skill, ingenuity, and inventiveness, their construction is clear and their original basis is never hidden.

STANDARD.

In all the Variations there is woven a web of harmony both fanciful and artistic. Such is the contrapuntal skill employed in his treatment of the theme that it is only to be regretted that the composer did not make a little more use of it. Mr. Wood secured an excellent reading, and at the close Mr. Austin was called to the platform.

DAILY NEWS.

Quite the most interesting and individual work was Mr. Ernest Austin's set of Variations for strings on the tune of "The Vicar of Bray."

DAILY MAIL.

It is an immensely clever composition and should be placed permanently in the repertory of the Queen's Hall Orchestra.

REFEREE.

Splendidly played, the merry work was most heartily received.

SUNDAY TIMES.

Nine in number, they show great ingenuity in preserving the characteristics of the subject theme through its rhythmic and harmonic transformations, and the music has a spontaneous and thoroughly English feeling. One of the best sections that in march time, in the Trio of which fragments of the subject theme are heard against a drone accompaniment; while in the last section the composer has given play to a merry wit and has pictured the four instruments in strenuous competition for priority of audience. So clear was its humour that it was followed with ripples of laughter from the audience, and the call to the composer was unusually enthusiastic.

MUSICAL STANDARD.

A work of such absolute delightfulness is not heard everyday. From start to finish one's interest was held captive as the composer commented variously upon his theme. In the spirit of true beauty were Variations one, three and eight, while energy dominated others, and a vein of delicious humour accounted for the rest. The writing is always clear and sane, with any amount of sheer cleverness. The Finale is an absolute inspiration of humour, and is worked out with irresistible comedy.

THE BLACKPOOL MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

OCTOBER 18, 19, 20, 21, 22.

For the tenth time this great festival has proved its popularity, and more, its utility. As we have before said, it is at this festival that the fruits of the competition movement can be found at their best. Almost every department of executive music is catered for. For five days, from morning to late evening, streams of competitors flowed before eleven judges. In all, about four thousand individuals were concerned. Even at the minor events, which were going on simultaneously in three halls, there were always good audiences, and at the competitions in the chief classes the great Winter Garden hall was packed by about four thousand persons. The competitors included 124 junior vocal soloists, 339 adult vocal soloists, 110 pianists, 39 violinists, 3 viola players and 3 violoncellists, 11 female-voice choirs, 8 church or chapel choirs, 13 male-voice choirs, 12 mixed-voice choirs, 22 children's choirs, 17 vocal quartets and quintets, 3 action-song and 2 maypole parties. Concerts were given every evening. A festival chorus of about one hundred and fifty voices sang six madrigals, under Mr. Herbert Whittaker, and displayed fine training. Miss Sarah Crook and Miss Annie Skidmore sang solos, and Mr. Edward de Jong played flute solos. The festival programme book is a volume of eighty-eight pages, nowhere defaced by irritating advertisements, and the value of the volume is enhanced by interesting information about the test-pieces. Outstanding features of the festival were the children's action-songs, the victory of a London (Leyton) school choir in the children's classes, the excellence of the solo-singing classes, and the virtuoso performance of the very exacting tests in the chief choral classes.

THE TESTS.

One heard some murmurs from competitors as to the difficulty of the tests. These were voiced by Dr. McNaught in adjudicating in a male-voice class, in which the tests were Cornelius's part-song, 'In the midst of life,' and Schumann's 'The night march,' and by Dr. Brewer in adjudicating in the chief male-voice class, in which 'On Craig Dhu,' by Frederick Delius, was one of the tests. But Dr. McNaught, while considering the difficulties of the Cornelius too great, objected mainly to the choice of two sombre pieces for these men to work at for weeks. Dr. Brewer questioned the effectiveness of the Delius piece, and remarked upon its extreme difficulty. But after all only two or three out of sixty-three were questioned. No one who examines the whole list could fail to accord a tribute of admiration to the section of the committee responsible for the choosing of the tests. They display insight, breadth of view, and fine taste.

THE SOUTH AND THE NORTH.

Two remarkable results will make this year's festival memorable. First a choir of school children from Leyton (London, E.), under Miss Nicholls, came and conquered. It was a bold enterprise, but it has been justified by its complete success. The fact that the two prizes won amounted to only seven guineas, and the expense of bringing the children was about £100, will effectually silence critics who think the only quest is money. It is not too much to say that the singing of these Leyton children was a revelation even to the proud North.

Next a male-voice choir from Stourbridge, under Mr. G. H. Woodall, came and sang with amazing vitality, fine tone, and dramatic expression, and took away a first-prize although Manchester and Colne were in the field.

THE LATE MISS WAKEFIELD.

The programme contained the following references to the late Miss Wakefield:

'The predominating thought in preparing the preface this year is the expression of our deep sympathy with what may be truthfully termed the parent organization of the Competitive Festival movement. We allude, of course, to the recent death of Miss Wakefield, the founder of the Westmorland Festival at Kendal; and when we say the Westmorland Festival, we mean the inspiration of all the kindred Festivals that have since been established. An enterprise, owing its inception to a competition held in an obscure Westmorland village (Sedgwick) in 1885, and that has since grown to such enormous dimensions, spreading over all England, is a fitting memorial to the presiding genius who has so recently departed. To very few is it allowed the satisfaction of seeing the fruit of their labours result in such a harvest.'

RESULTS.

SOLO SINGING.

The adult solo-singing was divided into eight classes, each voice having its lyric and its dramatic sections.

The winners in each class and the tests were as follows:

Dramatic soprano.—'Non mi dir,' from 'Don Giovanni' (Mozart). Miss Maude A. Ward (Barnsley).

Mezzo-soprano.—'Im Herbst' ('In the autumn'), (Robert Franz). Miss Irene Buckley (Derby).

Dramatic contralto.—'Noble signors,' from 'Les Huguenots' (Meyerbeer). Miss Mira Gerrard (Bolton).

Contralto.—'Feldensamkeit' ('In summer fields') (Brahms). Miss Annie Barker (Guide Bridge).

Dramatic tenor.—'The sun returns,' from 'Eugén Onégin' (Tchaikovsky). Mr. W. H. Teal (Halifax).

Tenor.—'Pensée d'Automne' (Massenet).

Mr. E. M. Hargreaves (Bacup).

Bass.—'Si la rigueur,' from 'La Juive' (Halévy).

Arthur Rawstorn (St. Anne's-on-Sea).

Baritone.—'Eri tu,' from 'Un ballo in maschera' (Verdi).

Mr. Richard Tranter (St. Helens).

The eight winners competed afterwards for the Rose Bowl, with the result that it was awarded to Mr. E. M. Hargreaves, a young miner. The ability displayed in this competition was remarkable.

All the choirs sang (a) 'On Craig Dhu' (Delius) and (b) 'In the silent west' (Bantock), and the best four were selected to sing (c) 'Cold winter' (Debussy) and (d) 'Hard by a crystal fountain' (Thomas Morley).

We regret that we have not space this month for a detailed criticism of the chief choirs. There was much in the performances that invites remark—chiefly laudatory—which we hope to be able to give next month.

The adjudicators were Dr. W. G. McNaught, Dr. A. H. Brewer, Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor, Madame Edith Hands, Mr. Edward de Jong, Mr. Paul le Vallon, Mr. Francis Harford, Mr. Charles Risegari, Mr. John James, Mr. J. Bates, and Mr. C. H. Fogg.

Accompanists: Messrs. C. H. Fogg, A. Vivian Jackson, and Clifford Higgin.

Councillor Collins was as usual the businesslike platform steward, and Mr. Lionel H. Franceys the general honorary secretary.

THE FARMER ROAD (LEYTON, LONDON, E.) GIRLS' SCHOOL CHOIR.

This Choir (head-mistress, Miss Mary Hart), which awoke the other day, at Blackpool and found itself famous, has long enjoyed a high reputation for its school singing. In view of what is sometimes said as to singing hindering other work of the school, it may be well to note at once that all the other educational work at Farmer Road has also achieved a high standard. The history of the school choir is an enlightening testimony to the educational value of competitions. In 1906, Miss Hart entered the choir for the girls' choir section of the Stratford (London, E.) festival, and they won the first-prize. In 1907, Miss Margaret Nicholls, one of the assistant-mistresses, was appointed conductor, and it has been under this lady's skilful training that the choir has won its present remarkable position. It would be rash to say that it is the best school choir in the country, for there is much that goes on in village and town that escapes publicity. But the Farmer Road School Choir can at least claim to-day that they are the most widely-known school choir, for their recent achievements at Blackpool have been recorded in newspapers read by millions. Miss Nicholls soon realised that the foundation of all success in choir training was voice culture and purity of vowel production, and in order to pursue the study of these subjects under an acknowledged expert, she attended the course of lecture-lessons given by Mr. James Bates on Saturday mornings at the Royal Academy of Music. There she became acquainted with Mr. Bates's book, 'Voice culture for children,' the exercises in which she has ever since used in the choir. But it would be misleading to assume that beautiful tone, produced without apparent effort, is all that constituted the merit of Miss Nicholls's splendid results. Tone merely provided her with the fine, plastic instrument on which she was to play and employ her remarkable temperament, her sensitiveness to subtleties of rhythm, her fine taste, and, further, her singular power to convey these precious qualities to her pupils. Who can place limits upon the musical potentialities of our children when such developments are proved to be possible? It is obvious that the 'air of the South' and 'the flat and marshy country' round Leyton are not factors that necessarily make for fine singing. It is then not the Leyton children who are exceptional, but the science and art of Miss Nicholls.

It is gratifying to know that the influence of Miss Nicholls's work is not confined to the school. Recently a course of lectures on voice-culture and school singing generally was given to the members of the West Ham conference of teachers (West Ham is contiguous to Leyton) by Mr. Bates, and the Farmer Road girls were present for the purposes of demonstration. It was to mark their sense of admiration and gratitude that the local school teachers patriotically helped to raise the sum of £60 towards the expenses of sending the fifty children to Blackpool. The Leyton and East Ham Educational Committee also very practically showed their approbation of the scheme by granting a week's holiday to the Choir, head-mistress (Miss Hart), Miss Nicholls, and the accompanist. W. G. McN.

MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

So numerous were the entries—both in the choral and vocal classes—for the ninth annual Belle Vue Choral contests, that the twelve Church or Chapel Choirs which had entered in the class for mixed-voices had to undergo a preliminary test, and sing one of the selected pieces—Mendelssohn's 'Why rage furiously the heathen'—leaving three to sing in the final, S. S. Wesley's 'O how amiable are Thy dwellings,' in addition to Mendelssohn's work. The result was that Colne Road (Wesleyan), Burnley, were placed first, Mount Tabor (United Methodist) Stockport, second, and Crosland Moor (Wesleyan), Huddersfield, third.

The following twelve well-known mixed-voice choirs competed for the fifty-guinea challenge shield:

- 1st. Moseley Vocal Society (Mr. John Shaw).
Barnoldswick Wesleyan (Mr. Frederick Lord).
Bolton Co-operative Choral Society (Mr. A. Knight).
- 3rd. Bradford Vocal Union (Mr. W. S. Wilkinson).
Accrington and Church Co-operative Choir
(Mr. E. Whittaker).
- 2nd. Armley and District Choral Society (Mr. H. H. Pickard).
Salford Vocal Society (Mr. F. W. Blacow).
Thornton Vocal Union (Mr. W. Lloyd Ashton).
Keighley Vocal Union (Mr. George S. Day).
Crosland Moor Choir (Mr. R. H. Dyson).
Colne Road Wesleyan, Burnley (Mr. Tom Robinson).
Millsbridge and District Vocal Society (Mr. Hezekiah Dyson).

The test-pieces were Sir Frederick Bridge's madrigal, 'A canticle to Apollo' and Weber's 'Over the dark blue waters' ('Oberon').

The winners in the solo-singing classes were:

Soprano.—Frances Collinge, Cornholme.

Contralto.—Emily Booth (Colne).

Tenor.—B. Kirkhouse (Maesteg).

Bass.—H. Greenwood (Nelson).

Mr. Grainger and Mr. C. N. Fogg acted as judges for the preliminary competitions, and Mr. R. H. Wilson was the adjudicator in the solo finals and choral contests.

CO-OPERATIVE CHORAL ASSOCIATION.

MIDLAND SECTION.

The eighth annual festival was held at the Co-operative Hall, Park Road, Peterborough, on Saturday, September 24, with Mr. S. Filmer Rook as adjudicator.

In the competition for choirs of 40 voices the tests were: (a) 'Hymn to music' (Dudley Buck); (b) A piece chosen by the choir. The choirs and pieces were as follows:

Grimsby (Mr. J. A. Thomas).

'When winds breathe soft' (Webbe).

Mansfield and Sutton (Mr. F. Ward).

'The silent land' (Gaul).

Peterborough (Mr. W. J. Roberts).

'The storm' (Rogers).

Annesley Woodhouse (Mr. G. H. Attwood).

'Comrades' song of hope' (Adam).

- 2nd. Long Eaton (Mr. W. Woolley).
 'Three fishers went sailing' (Rogers).
 1st. Derby (Mr. T. H. Bennett).
 'Weary wind of the West' (Elgar).
 Leicester (Mr. G. Bosworth).
 'My love dwelt in a northern land' (Elgar).
 Nottingham (Mr. J. W. Moore).
 'The sea hath its pearls' (Pinsuti).

The solo-singing prizes were awarded to: Miss E. Cope, Annesley Woodhouse (soprano); Mr. W. E. Walker, Long Eaton (tenor); and Mr. Dudley Marshall, Peterborough (bass).

MORECAMBE.

In view of the coming of age of this festival in 1911, a meeting of conductors was held at the Grand Hotel on Saturday, October 1. The committee very liberally undertook to defray the travelling expenses of all who responded to the invitations, and to entertain them socially. The result was a gathering of nearly seventy conductors and secretaries of organizations from a wide area. Mr. Riley and Mr. Turner (Nottingham), Mr. Looney (Isle of Man), Mr. Liddle (Newcastle), Mrs. Bourne (Barrow), Mr. H. Whittaker (Blackpool), Mr. Townsley (Nelson), and Mr. Hitchon (Habergham) were amongst those present.

Canon Gorton, the president, was unable through illness to attend. The Mayor presided.

The chief business of the meeting was to discuss the programme for the festival to be held next year (May 15 to 20), which programme had been selected by vote of conductors from the programmes of all former years. The gathering was also invited to hear an address by Dr. McNaught, who came specially for the occasion. Mr. Percy de Courcy Smale, the honorary musical director and secretary, in an able speech, introduced the discussion on the programme, and incidentally reviewed the history of the festival. He referred to the disaster of this spring, when the chief choral day had to be abandoned because of King Edward's death on the previous evening, and he besought the support of the audience in making next year's event a great one. Referring to Dr. McNaught's absence from the adjudicators' box for two years, he stated that this was entirely owing to a suggestion made by Dr. McNaught himself. They were now glad to know that he would once more appear next year.

Dr. McNaught said that they met that day under the shadow of a sorrow. He paid a high tribute to the late Miss Wakefield, and proposed the following resolution:

'That this meeting of supporters of the Morecambe festival desires to tender to the relatives of the late Miss Wakefield their sincere sympathy with them in their great sorrow. They recognise the national value of the late Miss Wakefield's life-work, and they trust that the promoters of the movement of which she was the chief inspirer may never lose sight of the high ideals she so ably advocated.'

This resolution was passed in silence, the whole company rising from their seats.

In his address, Dr. McNaught dealt with many aspects of the competition movement, and he referred to the eminent colleagues he had worked with in connection with the Morecambe event. He discussed recent developments of choral technique and their influence over composers, who were, he thought, tempted sometimes to ignore the rhythmic and other limitations of the choralist, who had to sing consonants and shape vowels. In conclusion, he said 'we had to take care to govern the movement and not allow it to govern us. We had to keep our ideals pure. We were all apt to drift, but it was our duty to avoid the line of least resistance.' Mr. Hatch moved a vote of thanks to Dr. McNaught. A general discussion then took place. Miss Ashworth (Ancrofts, Manchester), inspired by the fact that many choirs, who just escaped winning a prize, were depressed because they took home nothing, suggested that all choirs gaining at least three-fourths of the maximum marks should have a certificate of merit.

The meeting was very successful, and will no doubt favourably influence next year's festival.

LLANDUDNO.

October 15.

The new competitive festival was inaugurated here with every prospect of success. Large audiences were attracted.

In the chief choral competition for male voices the tests were (a) 'Battle of the Baltic' (T. Osborne Roberts) and (b) 'The long day closes' (Sullivan).

	(a)	(b)	Total.
'Cor Eryri,' Llanberis
(Mr. M. Orwig Williams)	59	57	116
Habergham Glee Union
(Mr. Ernest Hitchon)	73	68	141
Penmaenmawr
(Mr. H. Christmas Jones)	55	56	111

Manchester Orpheus Glee Society
(Mr. W. S. Nesbitt)	70	73	143
Denton (Mr. James Hardy) ...	72	62	134

Only one mixed-voice choir, the Salford Vocal Society (Mr. F. W. Blacow), came forward to sing Bantock's 'Awake, awake,' and German's 'O peaceful night.' They were awarded the prize. There were classes for instrumental and vocal solos, and a concert in which massed choirs took part. The adjudicators were Mr. Harry Evans and Dr. McNaught.

NAPIER, NEW ZEALAND.

The competition movement has taken root in New Zealand, and is spreading rapidly through the Dominion. Dunedin was the pioneer city, competitions having been held there for several years past; Christchurch and Napier followed suit, and Auckland is to hold its first meeting this year. The meeting at Napier this year has been very successful, there being some 250 entries for the various musical classes: church choirs, school choirs, vocalists of all kinds, pianists of various grades, violinists—even the side-drum and the bugle! Mr. Robert Parker, the well-known teacher, conductor, and organist of Wellington, and a musician of long and varied experience, was secured as judge; and a very active committee with an energetic and courteous secretary, Mr. A. Eagleton, made everything to go like clockwork. The tests for the larger choirs (up to seventy voices, unaccompanied) were Gounod's 'Ave Verum' and Elgar's 'My love dwelt in a northern land'; for smaller choirs, Martin's 'Holiest, breathe an evening blessing' and Gaul's 'The silent land'; and for the third class, Goss's 'O Saviour of the world' and Horsley's 'See the chariot at hand.' The choral singing was for the most part really excellent, Elgar's lovely but difficult part-song being especially well done. The school choirs sang 'With jockey to the fair' (in two parts) and 'Golden slumbers,' and exhibited some admirable teaching. All the tests were of a high grade, Mr. Parker being responsible for the selection. They included Mozart's 'Addio' and Elgar's 'Where corals lie' for contralto; Handel's 'Where'er you walk' and Barnby's 'The soft, southern breeze,' for tenor; Wallace's 'Freebooters' songs' (3 and 4) and Handel's 'How willing my paternal love,' also Schumann's 'Widmung,' for basses and baritones; German's 'Love, the pedlar,' Somervell's 'Shepherd's cradle song,' Mendelssohn's 'I will sing of Thy great mercies,' Linley's 'O bid your faithful Ariel fly,' and others, for sopranos and mezzo-sopranos. The instrumental tests were of an equally satisfactory standard, and a sight-reading test for singers and pianists was introduced at the request of the judge. The competition lasted eight days, from August 15 to 22 inclusive, and the proceedings were successfully closed by a concert of the prize-winners on August 23.

THE CORNWALL MUSIC COMPETITIONS.

It has been decided to extend the area of this competition, hitherto confined to the Truro district, to include Camborne and Bodmin, and to increase the number of days occupied by the meetings to six. The competition will take place at Camborne, for the western district, on three days; at Bodmin, for the eastern, on two days; and at Truro, instrumental classes only, one day.

SIGHT PLAYING WITHOUT DRUDGERY.

Fifteen minutes' daily practice for three months with my System enables pianists to play at first sight all their new music. Much better results are obtained than can be obtained with ordinary methods by the drudgery of years of practising for many hours daily. Pianists who would like to have the ability to play at first sight and thus receive the greatest amount of pleasure from their pianoforte playing would do well to enquire into my System. Hundreds of students testify to the wonderful results obtained.

The following is an extract from a recent letter:—

"The Ehremayer System deserves the highest praise possible for me to give. My fingers drop automatically on the right notes without having to sort my fingers and spell each chord, as it were.
I am sure that if pianists would only try your System, they would derive great benefit from same."—W. C.

JOSEPH BENNETT.

It would be an interesting task to inquire closely into the influence exerted by musical criticism. What has it done for the art? What are the functions of a musical critic? It is easy to observe that criticism is a considerable educational force, but it is not so clear that with all its penetration it has done much to assist the evolution of the art. It records, assesses, and makes known, but it does not create. It carries you along the road hewn out by the explorer, but goes no further. Wagner and Schumann were, it is true, critics as well as composers, but as critics neither influenced the other, and Strauss, Debussy, Ravel, Elgar, are objects and not products of criticism.

A cursory review of the history of criticism seems to indicate that it has always been chiefly occupied with analysis and demonstration of faults and virtues of existing music. This conclusion does not belittle criticism, but simply registers its scope, which is mainly in the educational field. We may distinguish branches of criticism: that which is concerned with historical development and the value of musical compositions, and that, more ephemeral, which is concerned with execution and interpretation. The former leads to 'Grove's Dictionary' and other literature which, it is satisfactory to record, is greatly increasing in quantity and quality in our language. The other branch is one of the chief functions of the journalistic critic, who obviously must also possess the skill to appraise the value of all music brought before him. He is the chief means by which the public get to know what is going on, and he is its philosopher and guide. This is a great responsibility, especially when it is remembered that a critic can do much to make or mar a composer or an executant. Then the critic should command a lucid literary style that can explain without intrusive or obscure technical phraseology. In our midst we have now many writers in the daily Press who combine all the necessary knowledge, judgment, and lucidity. But a generation ago the number of such well-equipped critics was limited. It is with one of the most respected of the Victorian group that we are now concerned.

Joseph Bennett was born at Berkeley, in Gloucestershire, on November 29, 1831. He is therefore now in his eightieth year. He was first educated in his native place, which, for a small township, was in its humble way a musical centre. No special attention was devoted to music by Bennett during his early youth. He assimilated all that was offered by the local choral societies and the small orchestras connected with the chapels, and he in time went to the church Sunday school and became solo boy in the choir. The band practices were the chief attraction to the youth, and he joined the musical society as a viola player and became exceedingly fond of the instrument. He recalls even now his vexation that in much of the music played he was merely doubling the violoncello in octaves. Amongst the music played at these rehearsals were arrangements for strings, flute, and pianoforte of Haydn's 'Salomon' symphonies, Corelli's string pieces, Dr. Arne's overture, 'Artaxerxes,' and the inevitable march from 'Judas.' When Bennett reached his nineteenth year his friends wished him to become an Independent minister, but after severe introspection he decided that he could not accept all the doctrine taught by the Congregationalists. His next important step was to enter the Borough Road (London) Training College for Schoolmasters. This was in 1853, when he was twenty-two years of age. He studied in this college for one year only, and then, after rejecting an offer from Stratford (London) on account of the condition of his health, he accepted a post in a school at Margate. In this bracing seaside town he also acted as organist to the Baptist Church. He remained at Margate for eleven months, and was induced to leave in order to become the master of the school attached to Dr. Allon's well-known Union Chapel at Islington (North London), then a centre of light and leading. There he became acquainted with Dr. Gauntlett, a clever and eccentric musician, whose doings and curious literary utterances attracted much attention at this period. After three years' service at the Union Chapel, Bennett heard that Dr. Binney's Weigh House Chapel (not far from the Monument), wanted a precentor and schoolmaster, offices not infrequently united in those economical times. He applied for these posts, and was duly appointed in 1857; but he soon found it necessary to resign the precentorship, because the duties of the office deprived him of the organ practice he was anxious to maintain. He then took up a position as organist at a chapel near Buckingham Palace. Meanwhile he retained his post as schoolmaster at Weigh House Chapel, and conducted one or two choral societies.

How did Mr. Bennett acquire the enviable literary facility and felicity of diction that distinguished his career as a musical journalist, and made him the most popular critic of his time? In the sketch of his life so far recounted there seems nothing in his early environment calculated to develop exceptional knowledge and faculty. His musical education was of the amateur kind, and his outlook was peculiarly early-Victorian; he had no University education, and he came in contact with no literary or musical set. The only conclusion is that he was to the manner born. The match was already there, waiting for some circumstance to strike it. How the fire was ignited he thus tells in his reminiscences : *

In the early spring of 1865 I was the conductor of a private choral society, the members of which were drawn from the district lying between Blackheath and New Cross. These ladies and gentlemen met for practice in the private house of one or other among them, and the gatherings, even apart from the music, were very enjoyable. On a certain evening, for me most eventful, after the practice was over, a few men lingered for a friendly chat. One of them said apropos to nothing antecedent : ' It is a wonder that I am here to-night. I was asked to attend a concert at Exeter Hall for a friend who is a critic, but could not be present in person. I thought it my duty to come here, and here I am.' These words, apparently of the very smallest importance as they fell from the speaker's lips, changed the whole course of my life. Moved by a sudden impulse I remarked, ' Should your friend want help in the future and I am disengaged I shall be pleased to act for him.'

There the matter dropped, and I thought no more about it till within a few days I received a letter signed ' Henry Coleman,' the writer of which invited me to call upon him at his office, somewhere in the neighbourhood of Leadenhall Street, precisely where I cannot say now, but I remember

Bennett's talent was soon discovered by the proprietors of the Sunday Times, and it was not long before he was installed as official critic. Within five years of his appointment to this journal he became critic also of the Graphic, the Pictorial Times, the Daily Telegraph, and he was a contributor to the Musical Standard, the Musical World and the Pall Mall Gazette. His work brought him intimacy with the best-known critics of the period : J. W. Davison (The Times), George Hogarth (Daily News), Grüneisen, Howard Glover, Sutherland Edwards (Morning Post), Desmond Ryan (Standard), and he was thus able to measure himself with his contemporaries and acquire confidence. In 1875 he was editor of a weekly musical journal called Concordia, which did not have a long life. Bennett also enjoyed the friendship of most of the best musicians of his time : Sterndale Bennett, J. L. Hatton, Benedict, Sullivan, Macfarren, Grove, that it was a large building, having offices in the basement as well as higher up. To one of those low-lying apartments I was introduced, and there found a man whose appearance, bearing and expression seemed to show that he was on excellent terms with the world and himself. In a few moments I gathered that Mr. Henry Coleman had not long before been appointed musical critic of the Sunday Times ; that his professional engagements as a solicitor occasionally kept him from concerts which he was expected to notice, and that having heard of me as one willing to help in an emergency, he would be delighted to welcome my assistance. About terms nothing, of course, was said. I was a voluntary worker, and regarded myself as well paid by opportunities of hearing good music. Upon this, events marched rapidly. I soon was the recipient of a small pile of tickets, and of instructions to attend as many concerts as possible, write notices of them, and forward the 'copy' to my principal. There stood I, at the giddy and altogether unexpected elevation of an honorary deputy critic, very proud of my new position, and extremely anxious to see my opinions in print.

* ' Forty Years of Music,' 1865 to 1905. Methuen & Co. This book contains (in addition to many portraits) eleven caricatures of musicians drawn by Charles Lyall. We produce two, by the kind permission of the publishers.

Manns, Mackenzie, Sims Reeves, Madame Rudersdorf, Hallé, and a host of others. Many interesting letters and conversations that passed between Bennett and his musical contemporaries are recorded in his book, and they serve to show in what high regard he was held.

It was in 1870 that Bennett was invited by Mr. J. W. Levy, the proprietor of the Daily Telegraph, to become musical critic of that journal. The condition was made that he was to cease writing for other newspapers, but he was allowed to continue to write for the Musical Times and the Musical World, and other strictly musical journals. Bennett's versatility was soon discovered in the Telegraph office, and his abilities were exercised in other than musical matters, always with great satisfaction. In 1883 he was appointed editor of the Lute, a monthly journal started by the firm of Patey & Willis, but in 1884 he had to resign the post owing to ill-health, and he went on tour in the States. He relates an amusing story of his experiences in Salt Lake City. He noticed a familiar Scotch name over a music shop, and he ventured to walk in. There was no one in attendance, and observing on the counter a copy of the Musical Times, he took it up, and presently a young man appeared. The rest of the story can be told in Bennett's own words:

To him I presented the Musical Times, with my finger under my own name, saying, 'Allow me to introduce myself as the writer of this article.' A flush of surprise sprang to his face, his hand shot out over the counter, and he exclaimed: 'For years I have read your writings in that journal, always wishing that I could see you, and now here you are!'

Bennett did not only write journalistic musical criticism and articles on general topics. It is a striking testimony to his industry and all-round ability that he also provided English composers with libretti of many cantatas and other large works. Amongst these may be mentioned the following (the names of composers are given in brackets):

The Holy Innocents (Brewer).
 Emmaus (Brewer).
 The Repentance of Nineveh (Bridge).
 Dream of Endymion (Cowen).
 Ruth (Cowen).
 S. John's Eve (Cowen).
 The Water Lily (Cowen).
 Thorgrim (Cowen).
 Gethsemane (C. Lee Williams).
 Bethlehem (Mackenzie).
 The Dream of Jubal (Mackenzie).
 The Rose of Sharon (Mackenzie).
 Jubilee Ode (Mackenzie).
 The Story of Sayid (Mackenzie).
 The Sun God's return (Mackenzie).
 The Golden Legend, adaptation (Sullivan).

Mr. Bennett wrote many articles for the Musical Times. The most important were those on 'The great composers sketched by themselves,' which went through many numbers between September, 1877, and December, 1891. These dealt with the lives and works of over thirty celebrated composers. Some—those on Berlioz, Chopin, Rossini, Cherubini and Meyerbeer—have since been published separately in Novello's 'Primers of Musical Biography' series.

In 1905 it was announced that after his forty years' service he had resolved to retire from the yoke of journalism and to seek repose. No one could complain of this decision, although it was received with widespread regret. But the critic's innumerable friends determined to give him a memorable farewell. First, on October 27, 1906, his brother critics, under the presidency of Mr. J. A. Fuller-Maitland, privately entertained him to dinner and presented him with a signet ring; and then a great banquet was given in his honour at the Trocadero Restaurant on November 6, when Sir Alexander Mackenzie presided. This function was attended by a large company of notabilities in music and the sister arts. The tribute was a splendid one, and obviously deeply impressed the chief guest. Sir Alexander Mackenzie paid an eloquent testimony to the unique position Mr. Bennett held in the estimation of his brother critics, musicians, and the general public interested in music. Much of his speech was quoted in our report of the banquet (December, 1906), but there are other passages that deserve quotation here. Sir Alexander said:

I am not going to offer any excuse or express any surprise at finding myself in this conspicuous position, for the simple reason that it gives me too much genuine pleasure to propose the toast [to Mr. Bennett] which has drawn us so closely together to-night. All the more so, because this is in certain respects a somewhat rare gathering, for it is by no means of frequent occurrence that so many musicians, lovers of music, and members of the journalistic world meet to sound one single, unvaried note. But, as Sheridan said of the stage, 'When we do agree, our unanimity is wonderful.' To-night, at least, a chairman should find no difficulty in accurately representing the sentiments of those in whose name he is speaking. . . . I have yet to meet the man who really honestly enjoyed being called a 'veteran,' and I will not risk the word to-night. But during an active experience extending over forty-one years, how many changes, how much real advance, and possibly also some imaginary progress, how many steady stars as well as erratic comets, which rise, blaze and disappear to make room for newer signs and portents in the musical heavens, has our friend seen and chronicled? How many of our native musicians, composers, and performers, have been helped to the front and had the satisfaction of his encouraging words? He has richly earned the gratitude which English art, its institutions, and artists owe to a staunch friend, adviser and helper. . . . It is the rare combination of a very wide knowledge and experience of every branch of the musical art, with poetic gifts and imaginative powers, which have lifted his journalistic efforts far beyond the sphere of mere criticism, and given to them that literary value which we all recognise and prize so highly. . . . By no amount of practical knowledge, experience, or even literary skill, could he have attained the high position he holds in his own profession, or have gained so much respect and esteem from us, without the possession of the qualities of great sincerity and earnestness.

Mr. Bennett has now returned to the scenes of his youth at Berkeley, where he lives the simple, tranquil life we all hope he may long enjoy.

INTERNATIONAL MUSICAL CONGRESS.

LONDON, MAY 29 TO JUNE 3, 1911.

The International Musical Society, now in the eleventh year of its existence, is a federation of musicians and musical connoisseurs of all countries. It holds local meetings, publishes a monthly and a quarterly polygot journal, and holds biennial international congresses by which a reciprocity of feeling between musicians of various nationalities is fostered.

The chief officials are elective, and are at present as follows:

GOVERNING BODY.

GENERAL PRESIDENT—Sir Alexander C. Mackenzie.

GENERAL TREASURER—Geh. Hofrath Dr. O. von Hase.

GENERAL SECRETARY—Dr. Charles Maclean.

MEMBERS—

(The Sectional Presidents of 17 countries, viz.):—

Austria-Hungary, Prof. Guido Adler.
Baden, Prof. Philipp Wolfrum.
Bavaria, Prof. Adolf Sandberger.
Belgium, Dr. Edgar Tinel.
Denmark, Prof. Angul Hammerich.
France (North), M. Charles Théodore Malherbe.
France (South), M. Charles L'Hôpital.
Germany (North), Prof. Hermann Kretzschmar.
Germany (South-West), Dr. M. Bauer.
Holland, Dr. D. F. Scheurleer.
Italy, Prof. Guido Gasperini.
Russia, M. Heinrich von Opieski.
Saxony-Thuringia, Prof. Hugo Riemann.
Spain, Prof. Felipe Pedrell.
Sweden, Fabrikant C. Claudius.
Switzerland, Kapellmeister Hermann Suter.
United States of America, Prof. Albert Stanley.

The sectional committee for Great Britain and Ireland is as follows:

PRESIDENT—Sir Alexander C. Mackenzie.

VICE-PRESIDENT—Dr. William H. Cummings.

MEMBERS:—

Granville Bantock, Esq.	J. A. Fuller Maitland, Esq.
Sir Frederick Bridge.	Dr. W. G. McNaught.
Edward J. Dent, Esq.	Samuel Myerscough, Esq.
Clifford B. Edgar, Esq.	Dr. Frederick Niecks.
Dr. W. H. Hadow.	Sir Hubert Parry, Bart.
Alfred H. Littleton, Esq.	William Barclay Squire, Esq.
Dr. Charles Maclean.	Sir Charles Villiers Stanford.

JOINT HONORARY SECRETARIES:—

Dr. Charles Maclean.
 Dr. W. G. McNaught.

The first Congress of the Society was held at Leipsic, in 1904, the second at Basle, in 1906, and the third at Vienna, in 1909.

The next Congress will be held in London from May 29 to June 3, 1911. The Congress will give an opportunity, which may not for a long time occur again, of making known to foreign visitors the development of our native art, and of increasing the bonds of friendship which should unite and animate all lovers of the art, of whatever nationality.

The Vienna Congress cost, irrespective of civic and court hospitality, about £4,000. Towards this sum the Austrian Government gave £1,600, the Vienna Town Corporation £1,200, and the Vienna County Council £400.

Although it is hoped that the British Government may give some assistance in entertaining foreign visitors, it is not probable that grants of public money will be obtained as they were in Vienna. The International Musical Society has no funds for such purposes, the subscriptions being wholly absorbed in its publications. It is trusted therefore that the general body of British musicians and lovers of music will come forward to support this national scheme.

A guarantee fund for a considerable sum (over £8,000) has been raised, and the guarantors form the General Committee for the purpose of carrying out the objects of the proposed Congress. The Executive Committee has resolved that not more than a fourth of the amount of the guarantee fund shall be expended.

The Executive Committee has held many meetings since the beginning of the year. Beside those gentlemen named above as members of the British Sectional Committee of the Society, it includes the following:

Sir Ernest Clarke.
 Sir Homewood Crawford.
 Sir Edward Elgar.
 Sir George C. Martin, M.V.O.
 Lt.-Colonel A. G. Balfour.
 R. E. Brandt, Esq.
 W. W. Cobbett, Esq.
 Dr. F. H. Cowen.
 Geh. Hofrath Dr. O. von Hase.
 Rev. H. C. de Lafontaine.
 Augustus J. Littleton, Esq.
 Charles E. Rubé, Esq., Honorary Treasurer.
 Dr. T. Lea Southgate.
 Herbert Sullivan, Esq.

In addition to the administrative and scientific work of the Congress, in the form of meetings, lectures, and discussions, the following entertainments are already decided on: (a) an opening reception; (b) two orchestral concerts at Queen's Hall; (c) a historical chamber-music concert; (d) a choral display by the Huddersfield Choral Society of 300 voices; (e) a banquet.

Other entertainments are in process of organization, namely: (f) a display of Old English church music; (g) a display of massed military bands; (h) an opera performance; (i) a Conversazione.

The leading feature of the musical entertainments will be the performance of the best and most representative English music, past and present.

It is hoped that foreign Governments will be officially represented at the Congress.

Members of the Society attending the Congress from outside Great Britain and Ireland will be treated as guests, enjoying all Congress entertainments without the payment of any Congress fee.

The Right Hon. A. J. Balfour, M.P., has accepted the presidency of the Congress. A meeting of the General Committee, and others interested, had been arranged to take place at the Mansion House on the afternoon of December 14, under the chairmanship of the Lord Mayor, but owing to the political situation this has been postponed.

All particulars as to membership of the International Musical Society, and regarding the Congress, can be obtained from the Hon. Secretaries, 160, Wardour Street, London, W.

COUNTERPOINT FOR THE MILLION.

By F. CORDER.

Have we not been a trifle—just a wee shade—too serious lately? Of course the Musical Times is a serious paper, and it is right that it should be so; it has matters of weight and dignity to report and discuss, and there are plenty of people ready to play the fool. But, you know, there are weaker brethren, and they may not all care to read about the whole-tone scale, or the man who would have you believe he is a-musing in his library. Minora canamus.

It is now the festive season, when pantomime conductors meekly remind the public that they were once British composers, effecting this remonstrance by combining music-hall songs contrapuntally with fragments of good music. This has been traditional for the last fifty years at least, but as no one ever takes the least notice of it, it is clear that more strenuous measures are necessary. And if you will pardon this long introduction, I will try to tell you what these should be.

Few of my readers, I fear, have even heard of Pietro Raimondi, who flourished in Naples about a century ago. This worthy, after writing a dozen fugues which could be played any three at the same time, four other fugues in four different keys which could be played together (pace Richard Strauss!), and an overture which could be played in canon a bar later by a second orchestra (I have seen those works with these eyes)—wrote, for the Carnival, a serious opera and a comic one, so arranged as to be performed simultaneously, at stages on opposite sides of the public square. The overtures went together, but after this there would be a chorus in one opera while a song or duet was taking place in the other, so that they seemed quite independent. Fired by the success of this effort, he wrote three oratorios, entitled 'Potiphar,' 'Pharaoh,' and 'Jacob,' which, after being performed separately, were played all at once to a fourth libretto called 'Joseph.' It is said that the excitement caused by this performance was so great as to prove fatal to the aged composer. All this sounds, I know, like a fairy-tale, but is, I assure you, unvarnished fact. A good deal of the wonder vanishes from the technical musician's mind when he is informed that Signor Raimondi's works bear just as much resemblance to music as a game of chess bears to a real battle. They have neither blood, smoke, surprise, life, nor death, and when the thing is over nothing of any consequence has happened.

But the record of the great momentary impression these feats produced, together with a profound knowledge of the weaknesses of the British public, has inspired me with the following brilliant idea. Would it not be interesting to our audiences if compositions could be presented to them two or three at a time? Above all, would they not feel they had got good value for their money? Aha! that touches and thrills the British heart. Already they delight to hear Godowsky play the Chopin studies two or three together, and Weingartner's orchestral arrangement of Weber's 'Invitation to the waltz' with all the four subjects at once is considered quite a bargain at the Queen's Hall. I am quite serious: I have, in fact, arranged for the eminent pianist mentioned, Beethoven's 'Waldstein' and 'Appassionata' Sonatas for simultaneous performance, beginning thus:

while the last movement (rather difficult, but that is of no consequence) starts:

But this is a mere trifle: apply the principle to recital programmes in general, and you will perceive its excellence. The whole of the 'Chopin group' or the 'Schumann group' could be thus, so to speak, 'oxo-ed,' and room left on the programme for Mendelssohn or Bennett, who are at present crowded out.

I fear we must leave the vocalists out of our scheme. To be sure, one ballad is so like another that it would be difficult to tell whether you were hearing one or several. From the words one would always incline to believe the latter. But think of the possibilities for an orchestral concert thus opened up! Wagner—like a true prophet and seer—made his 'Meistersinger' overture with all three subjects in counterpoint, but I wonder whether even he dreamed of what I here disclose to you—the simultaneous performance of his 'Tannhäuser' overture and 'Lohengrin' and 'Parsifal' preludes! I give you a sample, lest you should disbelieve me:

You perceive that the crotchets of the first two are equivalent to the quavers of the other, when the tempos exactly match.

Other well-known overtures might be readily combined after this fashion; while as to symphonic poems, I have tried the experiment of setting two pianolas to play Strauss's 'Zarathustra' and 'Tod und Verklärung' at the same time, with the curious result that I could have sworn I was listening to 'Elektra.' I am open to offers to arrange any or all of the Beethoven symphonies to go with others, but I fear that I shall hardly get a commission, as the critics tell us that these works are rococo and worn out. Still, might not skilful arrangement of this sort infuse a fresh life into them? Who knows? Of modern symphonies there are only two—not counting Elgar's—which are really popular, and the task of fitting Tchaikovsky's fifth and sixth symphonies together is so simple as to be almost beneath my attention. For instance:

And the menacing leit-motive of the E minor will fit in anywhere against the battle-music of the 'Pathetic.' But only think how much less boring it would be to have the Violin concerto and the Pianoforte concerto played both at once! At present the soloist always races the conductor, but how thrilling this race would be with two competitors. One sees how Music may attain to far higher dignity in English hearts (minds, I was going to say) by becoming a branch of Sport. Would it not be truly glorious to watch the betting on, say, Kubelik and Paderewski, if both could be induced to engage in the following competitive exercise?

Here, surely, is at last an opening for the up-to-date composers! Alas, no! Experience shows that these gentry are thoroughly blind to their worldly interest; thoroughly unpractical and perverse. They will wallow in dirty chords like so many prodigal sons, but as regards the useful art of counterpoint, even such sportive examples as I have here indicated are beyond their reach, and they prefer the part-writing where nothing fits, except by accident, to the noble art which they are too lazy to acquire.

THE WHOLE-TONE SCALE AND ITS PRACTICAL USE.

By G. H. CLUTSAM.

Harmonization of scale-passages in whole-tones, by means of dominant sevenths and ninths, omitting the fifth, is a very simple matter, and the possibilities are shown, sketchedly enough, in Ex. 29 :

The student can easily vary the proceedings ad libitum in some such fashion as the following :

A reference to Ex. 12 and remarks thereon, will be sufficiently explanatory of the ascent of the B \flat in the third bar to the B \natural in the last, with its melodic descent to the dominant G.

In a scale of major thirds, quietly accompanied, as below :

there is nothing novel that a student may not have discovered for himself at this stage, but the innate sympathy with the rich, full chord of the dominant ninth puts the matter on another harmonic plane altogether :

The colour in such passages takes away any sense there may be of false relation in the conventional sense of the term. Drawing the parts closer together, one can even avoid that suggestion, although the nuances become more delicate. This exposition will bear careful examination. Here the succession of thirds becomes sixths by inversion :

The examples 32 and 33 illustrate the blending of the tonal chord with major ninths containing major fifths. (The score of 'Ariane et Barbe bleue,' by Paul Dukas, contains many of the finest and most interesting examples of this development of the tonal scale, and would well repay examination by those interested.)

When combining these chords with the ordinary material, one will frequently find that certain progressions are not acceptable as legitimate. It is quite possible to indicate resolutions that are parallel to bad progressions in the diatonic scale. The old rule, for instance, that a chord containing a suspended or anticipated note shall not elsewhere contain the displaced sound, will frequently be found to hold good.

The student can take it that the tonal chord is quite as sensitive to false progression as the diatonic; the call on the perception of the ear is, however, a much finer and delicate one. The smallest digression puts it out of balance with its surrounding material. This point is much easier to feel than to explain. Laws of music are based on a very simple argument. All that sounds 'good' is 'good'; and the determination of what it is that sounds 'good' must be left to the highest musical natures, and the essence of their power of judgment is that they must be creators. No critic or theorist has ever added a brick to the temple of Art, and never will.

It is very interesting to note that at an early stage of its career, some of our young English composers, and those perhaps most seriously to be considered, fell easy victims to the temptations of the tonal chord. Not that they have shown any particular individuality in its use; but the very fact that it caught their attention augurs for further developments. In the year 1906 several decided and well-stated examples appeared in a few and, fortunately, published works. Making a selection at random as being peculiarly illustrative, some bars from Mr. Benjamin J. Dale's Sonata (with the variations) might be quoted :

The first of these, from the Mazurka variation, is extremely effective. The slentando under the salient passage shows full appreciation of the delicacy of the resolution. Ex. 36, from the Finale, is hard and characteristic, and in the nature of a sequence, while the work is sprinkled throughout with similar effects. But the bearing of each is strongly on the scale, not the chord.

It will readily be understood that simple chord progressions such as the following—the exposition of one chord only—are, in themselves, limited in value and confined in effect:

Obviously any or all of the notes of the scale could be sustained, breve-length, throughout the first bar without disturbing the harmony. In analogous passages, where not more than four or five parts are required, it becomes a question of taste and judgment as well as expediency in the matter of resolution, to decide on the requisite components. Following are short examples of mixed passages:

In forming cadences the tonal chord, in combination with the full force of the augmented fifth, has the flexibility of the diminished seventh: that is, the tendency of the individual parts assists, by suggestion in notation, extreme facility in modulation.

It may be noticed by a reference to Ex. 32 and 33 that the scale contains six major ninths. The major fifths added, however, are away from the actual colour of the scale.

With the fifth omitted, as in the following example, the pliability of the scale's contents for modulatory purposes becomes sufficiently obvious:

Naturally, then, the two tonal scales hold within themselves the power of a dominant control over every diatonic tonality. They are dominant chords!

In association with the chromatic, the tonal chord severs connection entirely with the tonal scale as a method of expression. There is no precedent for its use, as I now propose to set forth, and despite a search in all the most likely quarters, there is nowhere to be found any example that at all represents the effect, the genesis of which lies in the passage shown in Ex. 3. There, a hitherto untreated power of the augmented fifth is brought to light. This fifth, in the ordinary way, is well understood, and, as has been shown, can be used as essential harmony to the tonal scale. It is the combination of two distinct augmented fifths, the component parts of each being separated by a whole-tone, that I would like to insist upon as a harmonic entity, and as distinct from the tonal scale. This chord, as a product of the tonal scale, is almost invariably used incompletely; although when treated as a harmony to the scale itself all the essential notes must inevitably occur, they are more in the nature of passing notes (vide Ex. 20, 21, and 23). Re-stating the fact that successions of augmented fifths in opposition, however distributed, produce complete tonal chords, some simple methods of treatment for practical purposes can be given; the insistence on certain basic harmonies in the first examples will enable the student to grasp with what freedom such successions may be treated, and direct him to further experiments:

It will be obvious that these passages are not confined to the one tonality, in the above instance, A \flat . Here is a variant in D major:

Ex. 45.

and in the following examples the same group of notes in the upper part, accompanied with incomplete dominant sevenths, with the real root as foundation:

Ex. 46.

Ex. 47.

Following are other passages with regular and varied bases:

A dominant pedal, either as an inner or lower part, will account for strange but legitimate harmonies. One example will suffice:

The first chord asterisked contains the G \sharp as dominant, and the second a complete tonal chord on a dominant bass (C \sharp)—i.e., a legitimate chord of seven distinct parts.

The next examples are with double pedal. The first is very beautiful and taken from a song of Maurice Ravel. It concisely shows that, if their genesis be properly understood, the modern 'decadent' harmonies are not so unreasonable or wilful after all:

Finally, an example from Louis Aubert's 'Le forêt bleu':

Within the brief limits of an article it would be inexpedient to carry the matter further; the student is asked only to accept what has been written, more as an indication of new and fascinating material than a complete exemplification of all the possibilities. As a matter of fact, all that is here offered touches only on the elements of a development in harmony that threatens to affect the entire musical art-work of the future. When the ear is sufficiently sensitised to recognize the tonal chord and to appreciate its tendencies, it will also be on the way to realise more complex variants, such as the acute and fragile harmonies that can arise by the use of suspensions and anticipations. It is tempting, but would be invidious, to illustrate some of the fantastic results of a very free treatment; and in any case it would be more interesting and instructive to allow the student to exercise his own fancy. As a slight and final indication of methods to be adopted, I will take the opening phrase of the Prelude of 'Tristan,' and re-harmonize it. The three bars will be sufficient:

The G \sharp in the melody is obviously a prolonged appoggiatura, the essential note, A, being but lightly touched upon. From a theoretical point of view of course the chord has several explanations, but the musical 'sense' of the phrase is based on an ordinary dominant progression B as the root, passing naturally to the succeeding E with dominant harmony.

Here is the effect of a similar treatment by the tonal chord, the G \sharp being again an extended appoggiatura to the A:

This may seem extreme, but the contention is, that if the combination forming the full tonal chord be thoroughly realised and assimilated as an entity, there is no difficulty in the educated ear appreciating and anticipating—further, even expecting—the resolution suggested; and in the light of present development, one has every reason for expecting that these and similar harmonies will fall, well-ordered and logically, into the elements that constitute the music-maker's material. By this it will be well understood there is no suggestion of over-leaping the old methods of expression. All that was, that is proven, remains sound and indispensable. To put the matter simply, as previously implied: Here is another paint for the paint-box—use it who will. To those who may find with it a means to extend their colour-scheme, to revel in a harmonic licence which is neither fallacious nor wilful, these insufficient remarks may help to further experiments. To others, who may be content—and reasonably content—with their present resources, it will contain nothing exigent. Sir Hubert Parry has somewhere said that the libertine was to be met with in the world of Art as well as elsewhere. Every young composer, especially he who is fortunate to possess a little individuality, has, by reason of youth, a touch of libertinism in his constitution. If his art is, as it should be, a utilisation of instinct, he will quickly realise that his musical shamelessness is only nature's rebellion against the inertia of custom. He will see that he has been attracted by ephemeral fancies, fancies toyed with for an idle moment, and summarily discarded.

Withal, in the fullness and ripeness of his artistic life, each fancy, for knowledge of good or evil, may have paid a little towards completion, as far as Art can complete itself in the individual. Here, may I be allowed the admission of certain qualms of conscience? While knowing that to the mature and well-equipped composer I am offering a safe field for investigation, it is probable that I am also placing a dangerous weapon in the hands of the neophyte; but as it is in misuse only valuable for suicidal purposes, there is some comfort in the thought that even the catastrophe has its compensations.

A sum of £500 is still needed by the organizers of the new Music Library in Oxford, described in our last issue, in order to complete the series of Great Masters. Donations should be sent to Mr. H. T. Gerrans, 20, St. John Street, Oxford, or to Dr. H. P. Allen, 18, Museum Road, Oxford.

Occasional Notes.

The appointment of Mr. Landon Ronald to the principalship of the Guildhall School of Music occasioned some surprise and more satisfaction. Mr. Ronald's career of late years has exhibited him as a virtuoso conductor, and there was a natural fear, even amongst his best friends, that the public loss might be greater than the gain. But it is authoritatively stated that he will not have to give up orchestral conducting, and therefore we may view the prospect without concern. Mr. Ronald so far has succeeded in all the professional tasks he has undertaken—perhaps because he has the rare wisdom of only attempting what he knows he can do. Therefore we may have faith that he will fit the onerous demands of the situation at the Guildhall School. It is not an easy task to placate a number of professional teachers and to satisfy the yearnings of some thousands of students, many of whom are young and have mothers. And then there are the City Fathers, who rule the institution and provide some of the ways and means. But with all this before him, we have confidence in his tact and skill, and we shall look forward to the continued happy progress of an institution that has done so much for music in the metropolis.

In the course of three important and suggestive articles on music as one of the problems of the public school, which appeared in The Times on October 29, November 1, and November 5, the anonymous writer has a tilt at the music profession, which he says is honeycombed with malice, envy, and all uncharitableness, and he thinks that if the profession could be infused with the public school spirit, it would experience 'a breath of clean and vigorous air' (whatever that may be). This pharisaic suggestion raises a series of questions which we cannot debate just now. But we would ask whether the musicians who have been trained in public schools—and there are not a few in prominent positions—are wholly free from envy, malice, and uncharitableness? Do they monopolise the clean and vigorous air?

It will be interesting news to many that Dr. Frederic Cowen's cantata 'The Veil,' a work which, on being produced at the recent Cardiff festival, attracted wide attention and earned high praise for its depth of thought, bigness of design and high musicianship, is to be heard in London for the first time early next year. The performance will be given by the Cardiff Festival Choir, under the composer's direction, at Queen's Hall, on February 21. The London Symphony Orchestra has been engaged in full strength, and the following soloists will take part: Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Phyllis Lett, Mr. Walter Hyde and Mr. Herbert Brown.

Recent dire events in South Wales have made many people learn for the first time of the existence of Tonymandy. Just now the name must suffer its association with violence and terrorism; but it would be unfair to judge the whole community by the excesses of the few. A working-class population that could support a musical society of 150 voices, capable of giving what we hear promised to be an excellent performance of Brahms's 'Requiem' and Bach's 'Sleepers, wake,' with orchestra (under Mr. Harry Evans, of Liverpool), obviously has much light and leading in its midst. The performance was announced for December 14, but it has been indefinitely postponed.

The Musical Association has issued a prospectus giving a list of the titles and authors of the papers read at meetings during the last thirty-six years. The account of the Proceedings of the last annual series of meetings, published in book form, includes reports of the following papers: 'Rhythmical Gymnastics,' by Louis Nicole; 'The Hungarian Folk-songs,' by F. Korbay; 'The King's Musick,' by the Rev. Henry Cart de Lafontaine; 'French music of to-day,' by Edwin Evans; 'Dr. Arne,' by Dr. W. H. Cummings; 'Chimes and chime tunes (Continental),' by W. W. Starmer; 'Flute music: a brief study,' by Dr. T. Lea Southgate.

GASPARE SPONTINI.

BORN NOVEMBER 14, 1774. DIED JANUARY 24, 1851.

BY CLAUDE TREVOR.

An interesting revival took place some time ago at the Pergola Theatre, Florence, of a work for many years unjustly allowed to remain in oblivion, and which contains some very beautiful and highly dramatic music. I allude to the above composer's opera 'La Vestale.' Spontini's name is but little known in England, though at one time he occupied a high position in the musical world, which world (it cannot be said to its credit) has treated him with unpardonable neglect. To those interested generally in matters operatic, the following brief sketch of his life may not be without interest.

'Qui nacque Gaspare Spontini il 14 novembre, 1774' ('Here, on November 14, 1774, was born Gaspare Spontini') is the inscription that may be read over the door of a modest dwelling in the village of Majolati, near Jesi, in Italy, which seems to set at rest any doubts of the date of the celebrated composer's birth. At an early age it was decided that little Gaspare should be educated for the priesthood, having an uncle who occupied a good position in the church, so consequently might, if conciliated, be able to give his nephew occasional help. But this project was short-lived, for we soon find the boy at the Conservatoire of Naples studying under Sala and Tritto. The unusual talent of the future great man attracted the attention of Sigismondo, the impresario of the Argentina Theatre of Rome, who proposed to him to write an opera. Not having completed his studies at the Conservatoire, he was bound to leave it if he accepted Sigismondo's offer, which however he did. 'I puntigli di Donna,' given with success in Rome, was the result. He was re-admitted to the Neapolitan School of Music under Piccinni's direction, and composed several other works, one of which, notably 'L'Egoismo ridicolo,' made the round of the Italian theatres. Anxious to free himself from the old forms, he determined to strike out a new line, and bidding farewell to Italy made his way to Paris, where his pathway, though strewn abundantly with roses, was not free from the inevitable thorns inseparable from the career. 'La finta filosofia,' which had had success in his own country, was equally fortunate in Paris, but 'La petite maison,' given at the Opéra Comique, failed entirely, as did 'Milton.' At this time Spontini was surrounded by a number of lesser lights jealous of his success (especially being a foreigner), and, one may be sure, not backward in letting fly their venomous arrows against him. Nothing less was needed than the protection of Napoleon to open the doors of the Accademia Imperiale di Musica to 'La Vestale.' Rehearsals took place in the sovereign's own apartments, where he personally superintended the mise-en-scène, giving special attention to the magnificent triumphal procession of Licinio. The first performance took place on December 15, 1807, and the success was immense. Two years later the same enthusiastic reception awaited another work, 'Fernando Cortez,' 'Olimpia,' which followed, proved a failure, in disgust at which (though unreasonably we cannot help thinking, after his other triumphs) the composer left Paris for Berlin, where he filled the post at a large salary of director-general of music. Here he produced many operatic works now entirely forgotten, among others 'Alcidor,' 'Numahal,' and 'Agnese di Hohenstanfen.'

Spontini was highly esteemed by William III. of Prussia, but, being accused of speaking disrespectfully of him (in what way we know not), he was deprived for a time of his post, but was later reinstated. He now felt a longing to return to his birthplace, which he did, and lived there modestly, employing his earnings in doing good and founding an institute for the poor and infirm as he had done in Berlin. He died at Majolati on January 24, 1851, and no one had a thought or a word for the man who had done so much good and was one of the greatest musicians of his time.

It is interesting to note how many composers of more or less fame have been attracted by the subject of 'La Vestale.' Before Spontini set the libretto to music it had already been offered to Cherubini and Méhul, but they refused it. As far as we can gather, the same subject had already been set to music by Vento in 1770; another by Giordano, given at Modena in 1786, then in London in 1787; another by Ranzini, after which came Spontini's, closely followed by yet another version, also given in London by Pucitta in 1809. Later, in 1816, Generali (for many years Maestro della cappella di Novara) produced a 'Vestale' at Trieste. One version was represented at Cassel in 1818 by Guhr, while Pacini in 1823 and Mercadante in 1840 presented other editions of the same subject. A ballet entitled 'La Vestale,' by Viganò, was given at the Scala, but the music of Spontini's work was largely drawn upon for this production.

THE MUSICIANS' COMPANY.

The annual banquet of the Worshipful Company of Musicians took place at Stationers' Hall on October 25. Dr. T. Lea Southgate, the retiring Master, occupied the chair, and about 150 members and guests sat down to dinner. The customary loyal toasts were proposed, and some presentations were made to successful students by Dr. Southgate on behalf of the Company: Mr. Robinson, of Kneller Hall, Mr. Gordon Burgess, of the Guildhall School of Music, and Bandmaster Cornfoot, of the Royal Naval School (whose award was received on his behalf by Major Hobbs). The new Master, Mr. Alfred H. Littleton, and the new Wardens were sworn in. Dr. Southgate, in a speech in which he proposed the health of Mr. Littleton, referred to the connection of the Master with the firm of Novello & Co., the pioneers of cheap music printing.

After expressing gratitude to Dr. Southgate for what he had said, and to the Company for their reception, Mr. Littleton, in the course of a speech, said:

I do not mind admitting that in years gone by I have had dreams of one day reaching this high office—and at times looked forward to it as the summit of my ambition. I am very proud and very sensible of the honour you have conferred on me, but within myself I cannot help wondering why this great position—for it is a great position—should have fallen to my lot. I am in no way worthy to follow the distinguished men who have occupied this chair before me.

My earliest connection with music was my appearance as a small choir boy—in a small surplice—at a church in the south of London. For two or three years, and regularly on every Sunday morning, I used to take part in singing Jackson's Te Deum in F. Our organist was an ambitious man: he got tired of Jackson in F, his soul aspired to better things, and he longed to introduce us to Boyce in A. He wore himself out with his efforts to do this—but did not succeed during my time. We went on singing Jackson in F. After some years' interval, my next step was to receive tuition from several very eminent musicians: they endeavoured to teach me to play the pianoforte, the organ, and even the violoncello. Gentlemen, they all failed: I cannot tell you why, but they failed. And so, gentlemen, if it was fated that I was not to become a musician, you might think that I might at least have become a good business man, but I can claim no excellence on that score—I am not a good business man: whenever I have dealings with a musician or a composer, he always gets the best of the bargain. (Laughter.)

After drawing the attention of members to the International Congress to be held next Spring in London, he said:

During the year 1911 the house of Novello & Company will celebrate the centenary of its existence. I will not trouble you with any details in connection with this, beyond mentioning the fact that it was in 1811 that Vincent Novello—the founder of our house—issued his first publication, 'Two volumes of sacred music for use in the Roman Church.' He continued working hard for many years, and gave to the world many valuable works which but for him might never have become available—some, we know, without him would have been lost for ever.

Vincent Novello was composer, editor, and publisher, and it is to him as editor that musicians and amateurs are most deeply indebted. We all owe him a deep debt of gratitude, especially when we remember the time in which he worked, and that he worked alone and unaided. His successors have always felt it their duty to emulate and follow his example, and, I believe, if you think for a moment of the progress which has taken place in English music during the last one hundred years, you will allow that the work done by the house of Novello gives it some claim to a place among the musical institutions of the country.

In conclusion, he said:

I yield to no one in my love and veneration for this ancient Company. I know that it must prove almost impossible to do anything during my year of office to add to the glory of the Company; but if at the end of that time I can feel that that glory has in no way been dimmed, I shall feel content. I offer you once more my most grateful thanks for promoting me to the high office of Master of the Worshipful Company of Musicians. May it flourish root and branch for ever.

Students from the Guildhall School and Kneller Hall gave performances during the evening.

The thirteenth season of Miss Fife's Reading Chamber Concerts was inaugurated on October 29, at the Town Hall. These undertakings have been doing splendid work since their inception in 1898, and it is gratifying to find every prospect of a similar standard of achievement being upheld during the present season. The programme of the first concert was carried out by Mr. Hans Wessely, Miss Evelyn Fife (violin), Mr. A. Hobday (viola), and Mr. W. E. Whitehouse (violoncello), who played quartets by Tchaikovsky (Op. 11) and Haydn (the 'Emperor'); and Miss Mary Tomlinson, who contributed songs. At the second concert, on November 12, the same artists, with the exception of Mr. Whitehouse, who was replaced by Miss Stella Fife, took part in an extremely interesting programme, consisting of a Phantasia for string quartet by Mr. Frank Bridge, a String quintet by Miss K. E. Eggar (with the composer as pianist), and Dr. Walford Davies's 'Six Pastorals' for vocal quartet, strings, and pianoforte. On November 19, a miscellaneous programme included instrumental music by Grieg, Arbos, and Henry Eccles. The performances at all the concerts were on a consistently high level.

'KING SAUL' AT HUDDERSFIELD.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

If anyone doubts the hold oratorio has upon the concert-going public—and experiences in the metropolis and elsewhere may appear to justify the attitude—I can recommend a visit to some of the northern towns as a refreshing tonic. Huddersfield would be a good starting-point in the pilgrimage. Here there are a splendid town hall, built for concert purposes, and possessing a commodious orchestral platform and a good organ; a choral society of 320 picked voices, trained to the top of their bent by Dr. Coward, and forming what I am not too enthusiastic in describing as one of the finest choirs in the world. This I say after familiarity with the achievements of nearly all the big choral societies in the country. The qualities of the Huddersfield Choir are a rich sonority of resonance, arising in some degree from the unity of the vowel production, great precision of attack and skill in vocalisation, rhythmic responsiveness, clear enunciation, and, as called for, dramatic expression. All these qualities I have heard frequently exhibited by small choirs at competitions, but rarely by large choral bodies. A few years ago I heard the Huddersfield Choir rehearse and perform magnificently Sir Hubert Parry's fine oratorio, 'Judith,' under the direction of the composer. It was therefore with joyful anticipation that I journeyed on October 28 to be present at a performance of the same composer's very unjustly neglected work, 'King Saul,' this time, as with 'Judith,' also under the bâton of the composer. It says much for Dr. Coward's power of self-denial that he so often effaces himself when composers are desirous or willing to conduct their own works.

'King Saul' was published in 1894, and was produced at the Birmingham festival of that year. No other oratorio by this prolific composer better exemplifies his oratorio style. There are massive choruses of Handelian character, in so far as they are skillfully contrived to produce the maximum possible resonance by a sane use of the voice (a consideration surely often ignored in not a little modern choral writing); there are solos which give scope to every class of voice and try the mettle of first-rank singers, and which enable the story to be unfolded dramatically by impersonation of the chief characters, and the orchestral colouring is a constant commentary upon the situation.

The tragedy of King Saul is known to all. The King's dealing with the Evil Spirit, with the Witch at Endor, his distressful interview with the Soul of Samuel, his encounter with David, and his final overthrow, are as thrilling as a Shakespearian drama. Familiarity with the story does not stale its interest, especially when its enthralling situations are intensified by fine music. It would be scarcely interesting to readers to write of the work in detail. As to its execution, it is only just to record that the choruses were sung magnificently, and in a way that excited the tumultuous applause of the large audience gathered. As is usual at concerts, the feminine element was greatly in the majority. Yet, regardless of gloves and the decorous restraint which is so often a distinguishing trait of metropolitan audiences, the ladies made the hall ring with their plaudits. This recognition of merit and expression of satisfaction was not perfunctory or a mere compliment to a distinguished composer. There was the ring of sincerity in it. Among the choruses specially effective I single out 'Sleep,' and that finely developed one 'The beloved is in the hand of the Lord,' at the end of the third act. The interest of the solo parts centres upon King Saul (Mr. Thorpe Bates), and upon the Evil Spirit and The Witch (both sung by Miss Maud Wright). Michal (Miss Mabel Manson), her lover, David (Mr. Spencer Thomas), and Samuel (Mr. Charlesworth George), have also more or less important parts. Saul's Dream (in Act III.) is a strikingly dramatic episode, and it was finely sung by Mr. Thorpe Bates, who found scope for his characteristically impassioned style. Miss Manson sang brilliantly, and Mr. Spencer Thomas and Mr. George showed competence. But without invidiousness I may say that it was reserved for Miss Maud Wright to make the deepest impression, by her powerful interpretation of both the parts she filled. It was not so much her voice that told, although she possesses a fine one: it was her insight, well-proportioned declamation, and clear enunciation that held the attention.

The orchestra did very well. No doubt an imported professional orchestra might have done even better. But in view of the crying need in the provinces, it was gratifying to find that the Society was able to put its trust in local resources with so much justification.

A competent local professor, Mr. J. Edgar Ibeson, was at the organ, and Mr. J. Nichols was the orchestral leader. The president of the Society is Mr. John E. Webb, and the secretary is Mr. J. Eagleton. I owe them thanks for many courtesies.

It may interest many readers to know that the Huddersfield Choir will come to London in May to sing at one of the meetings of the International Congress. M.

THE PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

SIR EDWARD ELGAR'S NEW VIOLIN CONCERTO.

The first concert of the ninety-ninth season of this premier Society, which was given in the Queen's Hall on November 10, will be accounted one of the most memorable in its history. Sir Edward Elgar's new Violin concerto in B minor was produced for the first time. An enormous and widely representative audience was attracted, and the interest in the event was intense. No doubt the fact that the composer was to conduct, and that one of the greatest of living violinists, Mr. Fritz Kreisler, was to play, added greatly to the interest of the occasion.

As in our October issue Mr. Ernest Newman gave an analysis of the new Concerto, with copious musical illustrations, it is unnecessary for us to describe again the leading features of the work. We have to record that the performance by Mr. Kreisler was remarkably fine, although there were some very natural symptoms of nervousness.

The first movement created a deep impression, more especially on musicians who have not yet been convinced that formlessness is an element of strength and beauty. The lovely second subject and its treatment made even more effect than was anticipated, and the powerful climaxes were exciting and impressive. The Andante, with its simple, naive song-like theme, one of the most beautiful of Elgar's inspirations, was very fascinating and stirred emotion. Probably many listeners, more sensitive to sheer beauty than to the relations of formal development, will prefer this movement more than the other two. The Finale makes great demands upon brilliant playing. It is, however, not by any means merely showy, for in its course it embodies some of the most reflective moods of the whole work. This is especially true of the remarkable Cadenza, which riveted the attention by its singular spiritual beauty and its wonder-exciting novelty of treatment. As was pointed out in the analysis in our October number, the thematic material is drawn from the first and second movements and there is a glamour thrown over the music that suggests the ecstasy of a delicious dream. After the Cadenza the movement resumes its former course, employing sometimes a theme of the second movement, and with increasing breadth and expansion it now reaches a climax of vitality and brilliancy, and the end in B major brings the work to a conclusion.

As to the great success of the work on this occasion there can be no doubt. Probably there has never before been at a Philharmonic concert such a scene of enthusiasm. It is true that a minority of a Philharmonic audience not infrequently insist on wearisome recalls. But in the present instance the call came from the majority, and was evidently sincere. Kreisler's performance of the solo part entirely from memory was universally highly praised. It was so evident that the great player deeply felt and appreciated his task. The orchestral part was also finely played, although it seemed that a greater delicacy was possible. No doubt the principal orchestras in the country will be able to reveal many more beauties in the score when they are more familiar with its difficulties. Mr. John Saunders was, as during the last season, the principal violin.

Besides the Concerto the programme included Sterndale Bennett's overture, 'Naiades,' an old and very welcome favourite, and Elgar's first Symphony in A flat. The interpretation of the latter work is always specially interesting when it is conducted, as it was on this occasion, by the composer. Points are made, shadows and lights are specially and often very delicately contrasted, and the whole work seems to be more organic than when other conductors direct it.

The Concerto was announced to be played again, under the composer, and with Kreisler, at the Philharmonic concert on November 30. At the time of writing, we are informed that the house is almost sold out, so great is the desire to hear the work.

The second performance of the Concerto was given at the Winter Gardens, Bournemouth, by the Municipal Orchestra, with great success, on November 23. Mr. Kreisler played the solo part, and Mr. Dan Godfrey conducted. The enthusiasm of the large audience was great. Mr. Kreisler highly complimented the orchestra. Another performance was at once arranged for, to take place on April 8.

Among other coming performances, we draw attention to that to be given at Queen's Hall under Mr. Wood, with Mr. Kreisler, on Wednesday afternoon, December 28, and that to be given by the Liverpool Welsh Choral Union on January 21. Mr. Harry Evans will conduct the latter, and Mr. Zacharewitsch will be the soloist.

'THE ROSE OF SHARON' AT THE ALEXANDRA PALACE.—NOVEMBER 5.

The production of the revised version of Sir Alexander Mackenzie's oratorio 'The Rose of Sharon,' by the Alexandra Palace Choral and Orchestral Society, under Mr. Allen Gill, was an event looked forward to with much interest. The work in its original form was brought out at the Norwich Festival in 1884, and was universally hailed as a demonstration of Mackenzie's power that placed him in the front rank of British composers. At that period at least it was a modern work, bringing a fancy, warmth, and melody not hitherto so freely employed in the comparative austerity of an oratorio. Much has happened since 1884, and our ears and expectations have suffered throes of progress. It was therefore with curiosity that the result of the experiment of compression and revision and the substitution of new music, was awaited. The original version of the oratorio was undoubtedly too long for audiences as we find them. Composers who spend years over the elaboration of a great work, do not always realise the limitations of the powers of attention of concert-goers. We need not describe in detail here all that has been altered and added to in the new edition. It is sufficient to note that the dramatic action of the story has been quickened; some entire movements have been omitted, and the last part has been re-written. The words of 'The Rose of Sharon' are selected from Holy Scripture by Mr. Joseph Bennett. The chief characters are the Sulamite (soprano), her lover, the Beloved (tenor), and Solomon (baritone), and there are minor parts for a contralto and a bass. The scene is at first in the village of Sulam, and afterwards in Solomon's palace, and the last scene brings us back to the village. Solomon becomes enamoured of the Sulamite, but she resists his blandishments and remains faithful to her lover. The village scene is full of charm and joy, and is strikingly contrasted with the pomp and ceremony of the scene in Solomon's palace. Some of the most graceful and melodious music ever written by Mackenzie is to be found in the first village scene, in which the villagers sing of the joys of their life, and the lovers bill and coo. An instrumental intermezzo, entitled 'Spring morning on Lebanon,' is in complete keeping with this rural tranquillity. Then come the procession of Solomon and his meeting with the Sulamite. Here the music is exciting and dramatic. Solomon declares his passion in a rapturous song, which would be even more effective if the words were not so often repeated. The Sulamite does not respond, but is, notwithstanding, carried off to the palace and surrounded with its luxury. Here she sings a beautiful setting of 'The Lord is my Shepherd.' The women attendants sing some daintily-written choruses, and then ensues the most masterly section of the work, 'The procession of the Ark.' This is depicted in a chain of imposing choruses, which absorbs sixty-two pages of the vocal score. The scene is laid in an open place before the palace, and in turn the people, maidens, elders, shepherds, vinedressers, soldiers, priests (whose section is specially beautiful) come before us. Here is ample scope for fine choral singing. Next, we are brought back to the palace, and the Sulamite dreams of her beloved. Here again the composer is at his best. Solomon appears and renews his vain importunities. A female-voice chorus concerted with a duet sung by the Sulamite and Solomon, is very ingenious and effective. In the end the Sulamite is restored to her village and her lover, and the note of joy is resumed, culminating in a lengthy chorus to the words 'Love is strong as death.'

The performance under Mr. Allen Gill was a very good one, even though it betrayed some lack of familiarity with the music. At any time it is difficult to secure a united attack from resources widely spread over so vast an orchestra. The performers numbered over a thousand.

The soloists were Miss Esta d'Argo (the Sulamite), Miss Gwladys Roberts (contralto), Mr. Webster Millar (the Beloved), Mr. Reginald Goud (bass) and Mr. Joseph Farrington (Solomon). All showed earnestness and competence. Miss d'Argo may be specially commended for her painstaking and effective interpretation. Mr. G. D. Cunningham was the organist and Mr. G. Wilby led the band.

No doubt choral societies commanding good resources will welcome the revised edition. It is likely that audiences will also welcome the work, because it makes its appeal by its lucidity, breadth, melodiousness and abundant variety of treatment.

Church and Organ Music.

An article upon Dr. Hadow's address at the recent Church Congress has been unavoidably withheld until next month.

The new city organ at the Albert Hall, Nottingham, was opened by Mr. Edwin H. Lemare on October 29. His programme included a Toccata in F, by Bach, his own 'Rondo Capriccio' and symphonic poem, 'From the West.'

The new organ at the English Presbyterian Church was opened, on November 2, by Mr. J. Charles McLean, who played Bach's E minor Prelude and Fugue, Hollins's Concert overture in C major, and other works. The organ is the gift of Mrs. R. H. Morgan, of Towyn, and was built by Messrs. Blackett & Howden.

At the thirty-seventh annual festival of the London Church Choir Association, held in St. Paul's Cathedral on November 17, forty-eight choirs took part, and helped by the artistic qualities of their singing to provide an impressive and attractive service. The music chosen represented the work of Dr. Walford Davies (the conductor), Dr. G. F. Huntley, Walmisley, Arnold, Mendelssohn, and Bullivant. Dr. Huntley, who was the organist, gave a recital before the service, with the following programme:

Choral Prelude	Max Reger.
Choral Prelude	Karg-Elert.
Choral Prelude	Harwood.
Prelude and Fugue in B minor	Bach.
Sonata in D flat	Rheinberger.
Fantasia	César Franck.
Andante in G	Wesley.

The special service held in Hereford Cathedral on November 17, in commemoration of the centenary of S. S. Wesley's birth, was an impressive event. The choir, Dr. Sinclair, who was succentor and organist, and all others concerned, were deeply sympathetic with their task, and carried it out with fitting dignity and high ability. The anthems sung were: 'All go to one place,' 'The Wilderness,' 'Blessed be the God and Father,' and 'Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace.' The Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in F, and the chants in F and D minor were also used, and the hymn 'Jerusalem the golden,' to Wesley's tune 'Aurelia,' was sung. Dr. Sinclair played the Aria in F sharp minor and the 'Choral song and fugue' as voluntaries.

A Samuel Sebastian Wesley commemoration service was given by the organist and choir at the Parish Church of Battle, Sussex, on November 17. The music was entirely selected from Wesley's works, and included the anthems 'O Lord, my God,' 'All go unto one place,' 'Blessed be the God and Father,' and 'Lead me, Lord' (from 'Praise the Lord, O my soul'). The organ voluntaries were Andante in E flat (4-4 time), 'Holsworth Church bells,' and 'Choral song.' The whole was under the able direction of Mr. Bertram Weller, the organist of the church. A short address on Wesley was given by the Very Rev. E. R. Currie, D.D. (Dean of Battle).

Harvest festival services were held at St. Paul's Church, Regina, Canada, on Sunday, October 9, to congregations which have seldom if ever been equalled there. During the course of the evening service the choir gave Maunder's 'Song of thanksgiving.' Mr. Ballantine, Mrs. Perring-Taylor, Mr. Fairchild, Miss Marshall, Miss Morgan, and Mr. A. T. Hunter took part in the service as soloists. Mr. F. Laubach has the credit of the choir's high standard of quality. Mr. Ballantine was the organist, and the Rector, Rev. Canon Hill, conducted both services.

The splendid labours of the Brixton Oratorio Choir show no diminution in the continuity or excellence of their results. The first of a series of oratorio services was held by them at Brixton Church on November 6, when Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater' was performed by the choir of 120 voices, under the direction of Mr. Douglas Redman. The singing upheld the high reputation of the choir, and the artistic finish was made complete by the playing of a professional orchestra and the assistance of Mr. Welton Hickin at the organ. The principals were Misses Maude Wilby and Florence Riden, Messrs. Frank J. Webster and Herbert Tracey. The English version of the words was used, under the title 'At the foot of the Cross.' The congregation numbered over 2,000, and came from all parts. Gounod's 'Mors et Vita' is chosen for performance at the next oratorio service, which is arranged to take place on December 4.

The annual choir festival of the Brunswick United Methodist Church, Halifax, was held, on November 6, in the presence of large congregations. The anthem in the morning was 'Magnify His name' (Martin), and in the evening 'Hear my prayer' (Mendelssohn), Madame Amy Jowett being the soloist. Madame Jowett, Miss Ingham, and Messrs. A. E. Haslem and T. K. Gorton contributed Bennett's beautiful quartet 'God is a Spirit,' unaccompanied. For these services Mr. W. Elliott was the organist. The afternoon service was almost entirely given up to music, the feature being a performance of Stainer's 'Daughter of Jairus.' Mr. Edgar Isles was the organist, and Mr. W. Elliott conducted.

The second annual dinner of the Free Church Musicians' Union was held in the Holborn Restaurant on November 5, Dr. F. N. Abernethy presiding. This Union has now eleven centres established, with a substantial membership. Dr. Keighley is the president-elect for the coming year.

The first oratorio service to be held in the magnificent newly-opened church of St. Wilfrid's, Bognor, took place on November 16, when Mendelssohn's 42nd Psalm was sung by a choir of fifty voices, under the direction of Mr. George Lightfoot. An orchestra accompanied, and played also Haydn's fifth Symphony.

The Worshipful Company of Musicians made their annual state visit to the St. Cecilia service at St. Paul's Cathedral on November 22. A new processional hymn by the Rev. Bernard Reynolds and Sir George Martin was sung, and the choir gave an impressive interpretation of Boyce's anthem, 'O where shall wisdom be found?'

At the special Advent Service at St. Paul's, on Tuesday, December 6, at 7 p.m., Brahms's 'Requiem' will be sung by the Cathedral choir, with full orchestral accompaniment.

Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' was performed to a large congregation at St. Luke's Church, Bromley, on October 23, under the direction of Mr. H. E. Wyld. The soloists were Misses Dunford and Bower and Mr. B. Pearce. Miss Gwynne Kimpton led the orchestra, and Mrs. G. A. R. Tatham officiated at the organ.

MUSICAL HISTORIES.

The History of Music. By Waldo Selden Pratt.

[London: Sir Isaac Pitman & Sons.]

Standard History of Music. By James Francis Cooke.

[Philadelphia: Theodore Presser Company.]

To those who are studying musical history for examination purposes, the fault of most books on the subject is that they are too small, too large, or too interesting. Mr. Pratt, in his new book, has steered between the first and second; in saying that he avoids the third we mean that he has rejected the attractions of the essayist's style and method in favour of a succinct and judicial account of facts. There is no lack of literary merit, and the matter is presented in fluent and significant language. The plan of the book commends itself. In the more prominent sections Mr. Pratt outlines the development of music, considers the various schools and their inter-relation, and reviews the conditions at successive stages. Side-issues, the lives of the chief composers, lists of their works and of the names of less important men, are presented in smaller type. At every point Mr. Pratt gives evidence of his learning and his knowledge of the requirements of an educational treatise. The book is valuable in its completeness and its successful carrying-out of the author's professed aim to provide 'a book of reference for students rather than a literary or critical survey of a few salient aspects of the subject, or a specialist's report of original research.'

Mr. James Francis Cooke's work, of which the sub-title is 'A first history for students at all ages,' suffers from the effort to serve too many masters. Some of its explanations appeal only to the musician; its literary style, which is reasonable and sedate, appeals only to adult readers; and presumably the illustrations and some of the aids to pronunciation ('few,' 'franswah koop'-er-rang,' 'poo'-tschee'-nee') are intended for the younger generation. Perhaps the difficulty of finding an English phonetic equivalent necessitated the omission of 'Don Quixote' from a list of Strauss's works. There are numerous scraps of information (the book only fills 250 pages of large type) that appeal to nobody; for instance, one is told where Theodore Lack was educated and who were his masters. The explanation given of the Greek modes is likely to be confusing rather than instructive. Each chapter is followed by some test-questions, among which are the following: 'What is a prodigy?' 'Should this book be mastered thoroughly before an attempt is made to study some advanced work?' The statement that Sir Alexander Mackenzie is the principal of the Royal College of Music will occasion surprise. A musical map and chart form a feature of the volume.

Six Christmas Carols (Third series). Edited by Rev. James Baden-Powell.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

Three of these tuneful pieces are composed by the editor and three by J. E. Vernham. They are all easy, flowing, and melodious and calculated to please both listener and executant. 'Onwards, through the darkness,' strikes us as being specially good.

Thirty Songs. By Lady John Scott, with accompaniments by Alfred Moffat. Edited by Donald Ross. 2s. 6d. net. [Paterson & Sons, Edinburgh and London.]

The patriotic Lady John Scott lived for ninety years, and carried from a distant period to the present that same feeling which inspired Sir Walter Scott, James Hogg, and that galaxy of Scottish culture which dwelt so picturesquely on Jacobite matters. She was a musician in a bygone manner, and a versifier in an old-fashioned style. But she was the composer of 'Annie Laurie,' and her friends can claim that in that undying melody she reached the height of popular favour of more than one generation.

But few of her songs and melodies were published, and these only in ephemeral publications and anonymously.

A certain portion of her compositions remains in manuscript, and as a memorial to the memory of a worthy lady it is very well that the best of these pieces, with others of her published works, should be brought to light.

Mr. Alfred Moffat, the musical editor, is certainly the most fit person to deal with the original manuscripts, and the publishers have done wisely to obtain the services of so scholarly a musician, thoroughly in sympathy with and having such knowledge of Scottish music.

Miss Warrender's memoir is interesting, and the reference notes by Mr. Donald Ross most useful.

Magnificat and Nunc dimittis. Set to music in the key of G major by G. F. Huntley.

The Lord's Prayer. Set to music by C. Lee Williams.

Light in darkness. An Anthem. Composed by D. Cyril Jenkins. [Novello & Co., Ltd.]

The setting of the evening Canticles, written for the thirty-sixth annual festival of the London Church Choir Association, is, as may be expected from the composer, an admirable example of vocal writing to which the free organ part lends additional interest. There are many excellent points, while the employment of legitimate harmonies bring the service well within the powers of most choirs, and should assure for it a wide acceptance. Dr. Huntley is evidently determined to uphold the dignity of church music, and we look with pleasure for more examples of his refined musicianship.

Mr. Williams's setting of the Lord's Prayer, composed for the Gloucester festival of this year, appeals to us as an earnest endeavour to clothe the noble words with music at once devout in conception and capable of performance without the necessity of undue effort. We should have preferred that all the parts should sing the whole of the words, and feel that the point of imitation at the words 'Give us this day' should hardly have been permitted to rob the tenor and bass parts of their repetition of the phrase 'And forgive us.' We think it might have been avoided, though possibly the composer regards the work as a whole, which may be accepted as an explanation, if indeed any is necessary. The change of key at 'For Thine is the kingdom' is more than justified by its effect. We rather doubt the wisdom of placing the chord of C major so near to the end, and think a phrase between the last two Amens would have been more satisfactory. This may be hypercritical, and in spite of our remarks we welcome Mr. Williams's work as being well worthy of performance where circumstances and custom permit.

Mr. Jenkins's music deserves more than passing mention, and we think is a notable addition to the list of anthems suitable for festivals of saints. Variety of effect and excellent part-writing without complication are features of the work, while the organ part, from its legitimate construction and independence of the voices, makes a great addition to the many attractions the anthem undoubtedly possesses.

Scotch lullabye. A spring ditty. Arietta. Composed by Cyril Scott. [Elkin & Co.]

The first of the above songs is a setting of the well-known verses by Sir Walter Scott, 'O hush thee my baby,' that has more than the merit of being distinct in character from other settings. 'A spring ditty,' like the 'Scotch lullabye,' is carried along cleverly and attractively by a constant figure in the accompaniment. The 'Arietta' is a better-class drawing-room ballad. It will be a recommendation of these three songs that Mr. Scott has kept them well within the bounds of ordinary comprehension.

THE STUDY OF RHYTHM.

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

SIR,—Mr. Abdy Williams has, no doubt unintentionally, misrepresented my views. I have never said that 'we must refer to the bar as a rhythmical unit.' What I wrote was: 'The only standard of time which is strict is the bar, with its feeling of accent on the first beat, and it is the business of the composer to weave round this standard designs which vary indefinitely.' In my opinion, the rhythmical unit, if we use the term in the way intended by Mr. Abdy Williams, does not exist. Motion in music is like all other motion from one to another point, and the position of the point of repose may be very near to the starting point, as in the first subject of Beethoven's fifth Symphony, or more remote as in the air in the Sonata, Op. 26. The phrase, or phrase-section, should be considered as a whole, and if any break in the continuity of the music is made, it should be for artistic effect and not from obedience to a mathematical law of division. If the necessity for a rhythmical unit were accepted, it would be obligatory to show its presence in all music; but if we allow that it cannot always be found, all that we can say is that in certain cases the phrase can be divided into sections, while in other cases it must be taken as a whole. Any attempt to divide up the phrase into measures, in cases where points of repose do not appear, would at once spoil the free flow of the music.

The notion that to explain rhythm in music we must seek for a rhythmical unit, seems to be akin to the fallacious ideas of the Greeks, who assumed that because the space over which motion took its course was divisible, therefore motion itself was divisible. From this fallacy arose the well-known paradoxes of Zeno. M. Bergson, in his work 'Matière et mémoire,' has exposed the nature of this mistake, and has proved that all movement, being a passage from one point of repose to another, is indivisible. As we know that the mind takes in a passage of music, just as it comprehends motion of any kind as a whole and not as a series of units, we may well wonder why writers should wish to revert to the exploded theories of the Greeks, who were, not even excepting Aristoxenus (though he was in some respects in advance of the Pythagoreans), much given to the endeavour to find rigid laws which had no existence in fact.—Yours faithfully,

T. H. YORKE TROTTER.

THE 'ARETHUSA' AIR AND 'HUSSEY'S MAGGOT.'

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

SIR,—Unfortunately, Dr. Grattan Flood, in his article 'The Irish provenance of three English sea-song melodies,' in the last number of the Musical Times, has thrown no new light upon the 'Princess Royal' ('The Arethusa' air), and brought nothing to controvert the statements made by me in the Musical Times of October, 1894, and in the new 'Grove.' Uncorroborated assertion, or expressed belief, has small value as historical evidence. The reproduction of an air more or less resembling the 'Princess Royal,' with a song attached relating to events long after Carolan's death, cannot have much bearing on the question. The matter therefore remains 'as you were.'

In regard to 'Hussey's Maggot,' the air has, it must be admitted, some degree of affinity to 'To Rodney we will go.' Dr. Flood gives it from an Irish manuscript dated 1773, and claims to have now printed it for the first time. This latter statement is scarcely correct, for the air, under various titles, has been printed and reprinted many times. I reprinted it twenty years ago in my 'Old English country dances' (1890), under the title 'Herefordshire lasses,' from Longman, Lukey & Co.'s 'Twenty-four country dances for 1772,' where it stands as follows:

'THE HEREFORDSHIRE LASSES.'

But this is by no means its first appearance. Under the title 'The Gold Ring,' it is present in 'Twelve country dances for 1749,' printed by John Johnson, Cheapside, and again in Johnson's collection of '200 country dances,' vol. v. (1750) as follows:

'THE GOLD RING.'

This is by no means the end of the tune, for about 1770 it was arranged for two guitars by Thomas Thackray, of York, in his 'Collection of forty-four airs,' as 'Temple Newsham.' About this time, too, it was included among a collection of French cotillions as 'La nouvelle Anglaise.' The title-page of my copy of this work is torn away, but it is an English publication circa 1770-75. In Gow's 'Third collection of Strathspey reels' (1792) there is yet another appearance of this air as 'The Earl of Lauderdale's reel.'

The above is sufficient to show that the air has had immense popularity. The various copies quoted are not mere resemblances, but are practically note for note with each other. When the tune took the form of 'To Rodney we will go,' its popularity was even greater, but for an account of this latter stage the reader may turn to my article in the Musical Times of May, 1895.—I am, yours truly,

S. Hamilton Avenue, Leeds.

FRANK KIDSON.

LADIES AS DOCTORS OF MUSIC.

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

SIR,—In your November issue there is a paragraph to the effect that Miss Janet Salsbury is the only lady who has taken the degree of Mus. Doc. by examination. Perhaps you will permit me to point out that Dr. Annie W. Patterson, organist of Shandon Church, Cork, obtained the degree of Doctor of Music by examination in 1890. May I also add that Queen Alexandra, when Princess of Wales, was given the honorary doctorate in music by the Royal University of Ireland in 1885, and a similar honour was conferred on H. R. H. the Duchess of Connaught in 1903.—Yours faithfully,

W. H. GRATTAN FLOOD.

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

SIR,—I sang at four performances of 'Elijah' at Exeter Hall, on April 16, 23, 28 and 30, 1847, when Mendelssohn conducted; and I sang also at the preliminary full orchestral rehearsal. I have a very vivid recollection of those historic evenings. Miss Dolby sang 'O rest in the Lord' so much to the satisfaction of the composer that he turned to her with tears in his eyes, and said: 'Thank you from my heart!' The tempo at which the air was sung is faithfully represented by Mendelssohn's own metronome marking, ♩ = 72.

I have heard a popular contralto, now deceased, drag the time until it lost its rhythm, and the conductor was compelled to beat in quavers. It would, however, be very unfortunate if the opposite extreme were adopted. Surely we should strive to fulfil the composer's intention.

WILLIAM H. CUMMINGS.

MEMORIAL TO THE LATE REV. T. R. MATTHEWS.

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

SIR,—Many of your readers are familiar with the name of the late Rector of this parish as that of a musician of no mean taste and talent. His hymn-tunes are familiar features in almost every collection used in England and the Colonies. An effort is now being made to raise a suitable memorial to him in the form of an organ to replace the harmonium at present used in the parish church of North Cotes. The church is small, so that we do not need a very costly instrument; but as, on the other hand, we are mostly simple cottagers, we shall be grateful for the help of all who know and appreciate Mr. Matthews's work. Any donation, large or small, will be promptly acknowledged by

Rector, North Cotes S.O.,

Lincs.

All Saints' Day, 1910.

G. S. TYACK,

Rector of North Cotes.

WILLIAM BOYCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

SIR,—I have read with much interest the article on William Boyce, by Mr. H. C. Colles, and cannot help thinking that a series of similar articles on the most notable of the old anthem writers might be not only acceptable to many readers, but would form an appropriate companion-series to the articles on English Cathedrals, contributed by the late Mr. F. G. Edwards during the past few years. My immediate object in writing, however, is to ask the question, Can the song 'Johnny and Jenny,' quoted by Mr. Colles, warrantably be taken as a convincing example of Boyce's 'facility for writing fresh melodies'? By which interrogation I mean to say, Is the 'sparkling vitality' so evident in the song unequivocally Boyce's own? On going over the air during my perusal of the article, I was haunted by a sense of something familiar, which at first I could not clearly recall, but soon recognized as belonging to a song in Handel's 'Samson.' Dalia, in the air 'To fleeting pleasures make your court,' is employing all her arts to re-captivate Samson. This captivating air I made acquaintance with some winters ago, when consulting the full score prior to a performance of 'Samson,' which I gave with my church choir, it being one of the numbers not included in the performing version published by Novello. The first verse is as follows:

'To fleeting pleasures make your court,
No moment lose, for life is short!
The present now's our only time,
The missing that our only crime.'

And it will be seen that it is not without resemblance to the sentiment of the Boyce ditty. The music also bears more than a general resemblance to Boyce's song, there being in two places actual identity of notes. This will be made clear by comparing the first two lines of the duet part of 'Johnny and Jenny' ('Together let us sport and play,' &c.), as given in Mr. Colles's quotation, with the opening of Handel's air:

Mere similarity of notes, of course, may count for very little if the general spirit and conception of the music is different. But in the case before us the two songs have not a little in common between them in both words and music. One marked feature in both airs will not escape attention—the extensive grouping of the notes in twos to single syllables, this frequently taking the form of what in Scottish melodies is sometimes termed the 'Scotch snap.' The effect of this persistent phrasing is to impart to both airs an element of much persuasiveness. What difference there is consists chiefly in this, that, of the two, Handel's is the more beautiful music, being throughout of a more tender strain. Handel, as we know, wrote the oratorio of 'Samson' in the weeks immediately following the composition of the 'Messiah.' Perhaps Mr. Colles could furnish the date of 'Johnny and Jenny'; this might help in determining the question as to whether there was any unconscious (or conscious!) reminiscence at work on the part of either Boyce or Handel. Could each be proved to have been entirely ignorant of the other's work in this present instance, the interest of their respective productions would thereby be greatly enhanced.—Yours sincerely,

J. K. FINDLAY.

[In order not to spread this discussion over too long a period, we have submitted the above letter to Mr. Colles, who in reply writes as below.—ED., M.T.]

Mr. J. K. Findlay raises an interesting point, and I must thank him for having drawn attention to the song from 'Samson.'

The British Museum catalogue dates the publication of Boyce's 'Lyra Britannica' at 1745, and the third book, in which 'Johnny and Jenny' occurs, contains publishers' advertisements of a number of Handel's oratorios, including 'Samson.' On the other hand, the title-page to the third book has the sub-title 'A cantata and English songs set to music by Dr. Boyce, in which is inserted the songs of "Johnny and Jenny," etc., etc., "sung at Vauxhall and Ranelagh Gardens." So 'Johnny and Jenny' was neither new nor unknown when the volume appeared, and to discover which came first, it or 'Samson,' would require a closer study of records than I have been able to make. But even if, as I can quite suppose, the song 'To fleeting pleasures' was floating about somewhere in the back of Boyce's mind when he wrote 'Johnny and Jenny,' and that the phrase which Mr. Findlay quotes suggested similar ones, though that might spoil the song as an illustration of Boyce's 'facility for writing fresh melodies' (a quality which could easily be illustrated by other songs), it would make it all the stronger as an example of the fact that his melodies were 'both apt to the feeling of the words and fitting their metre like a glove.' He does what Handel makes no attempt to do: he sets the poem as it stands, not only the meaning of the words but their metre and their rhyme. Handel repeated the lines over and over again to various melodic contours; Boyce set each once for all to the one phrase which it suggested. Take an example: Boyce's tripping downward phrase on 'Sport and play' is clearly a bit of verbal illustration, neither words nor musical figure ever appear again. Handel's smoother downward phrase on 'Life is short' may be a piece of illustration, but the next time the words come they are set to three A's, each one a crotchet, and a third time they are set to his favourite cadence figure. Again, the sparkle of Boyce's song comes chiefly through the quaver endings of the phrases, which exactly catch the jingle of the rhymes 'guineas,' 'Jenny's,' 'sin is.' Handel had a similar opportunity in 'only time' and 'only crime,' and though he gave them the same rhythm the first time the words occurred, he afterwards spent no less than five rhythmic phrases upon them, including two which he had already used for 'Life is short.' In this respect Boyce's song is incomparably the better of the two.

Obituary.

We regret to have to report the following deaths:

MADAME LOUISE LANGENHAUS JAPHA, on October 13, at Wiesbaden, in her eighty-sixth year. Madame Japha had been a pupil of Robert and Clara Schumann, and had gained considerable repute as a pianist and composer.

Herr ERICH KLOSS, the well-known German critic, who died in Berlin on November 1. He was known mainly through his essays on Richard Wagner and his works.

GEORGES MATHIAS, the French pianist and composer, at Pontoise. Born on October 14, 1826, he studied under Frédéric Kalkbrenner and afterwards under Chopin, of whom he was probably the last surviving pupil.

MR. WILLIAM EVANS, for thirty years an alto lay-clerk in St. Asaph Cathedral.

THE MUSICAL ASSOCIATION.

PAPER ON OLD ENGLISH ORGAN MUSIC BY MR. JOHN E. WEST, F.R.A.M.

The opening meeting of the present session of the above Association was held in the King's Room, Messrs. Broadwood & Sons, on November 1, Dr. W. H. Cummings being in the Chair, when a paper was read by Mr. John E. West on the subject of 'Old English Organ Music.' Musical illustrations were admirably played by Dr. W. G. Alcock, Organist of the Chapel Royal, on an interesting little chamber organ, built by Snetzler in 1750, and kindly lent for the occasion by Mr. J. A. Fuller-Maitland. We give an outline of Mr. West's remarks.

The early stages of organ music are much more difficult to trace in England than in such countries as Italy, Germany, and France. We have no printed collections to correspond with the 'Tablature' and other organ books abroad, and in our manuscript collections of instrumental music it is often impossible to determine definitely whether a piece is intended for performance on the organ or not. Probably the earliest known specimens of English organ music are to be found in an old 16th century manuscript known as the 'Mulliner MS. book.' This book originally belonged to Thomas Mulliner, Master of the Choristers' School, St. Paul's, and is now in the British Museum. It includes music by Tallis, Redford, Farrant, Shepherd, Blitheman, and others, some of which is obviously intended for the organ.

In the 17th century, organ music began to assume a more individual aspect in our manuscripts. There is a manuscript volume at the British Museum in the handwriting of Dr. John Bull, dated 1628, and containing organ pieces by him, one of which includes registering indications. These are probably the first examples to be found in organ music by English composers.

The organ music by members of the Gibbons family next claims our attention. That by Orlando Gibbons is written largely in the slow and sedate style of an introductory voluntary, and contains some smooth and flowing contrapuntal writing. Several of his compositions are to be found in manuscript at the British Museum, Christ Church, Oxford, and elsewhere. An interesting piece by Edward Gibbons occurs at the beginning of his anthem 'How hath the city sate solitary,' in the Tudway manuscript collection, which is there entitled 'A Prelude upon ye organ as was then usual before ye anthem.' Dr. Christopher Gibbons must have been an organist of some considerable attainments, judging from a 'Voluntary for ye double organ' in manuscript at the British Museum. An entry in John Evelyn's 'Diary' describes his visit to Magdalen College, Oxford, in July, 1654, on which occasion 'Mr. Gibbon, that famous musician,' exhibited his 'skill and talents' upon the 'double organ' there. Christopher Gibbons is evidently the 'Mr. Gibbon' referred to.

The Ordinance of Parliament, in 1644, for the suppression of organs in the churches, and their silence during the period of the Commonwealth, must of necessity have given a temporary check to English organ music. But at the Restoration, in 1660, the organ again took its place as an accompaniment to the choral service, and opportunities were also renewed for its use therein as a solo instrument. (A quotation from the 'Brief directions' in Clifford's 'Collection of Divine Services and Anthems' was given in support of the latter statement.)

Among the composers of organ music during the period after the Restoration were three distinguished musicians—Matthew Lock, Dr. John Blow, and Henry Purcell.

Six interesting pieces by Lock are to be found in his 'Melothesia,' published in 1673. These are probably the first printed specimens of organ music by an English composer. A number of pieces by Blow exist in manuscript at the British Museum and elsewhere. Many of them are more important than those of either Lock or Purcell. Purcell's music for the organ is interesting and worthy of respect, if it does not always exhibit the genius which is so apparent in many of his other works. It is doubtful whether his fine Toccata in A was intended to be an organ piece, but as regards its merits there is some significance in the fact that it was published in the forty-second volume of the Bachgesellschaft as a work of J. S. Bach.

Twelve Voluntaries by Dr. William Croft (in manuscript at the British Museum) contain much good and dignified material, but they are more orthodox in style than the pieces by Lock, Blow, and Purcell.

The period of organ music following, although possessing certain characteristic features, can scarcely be described as a strong and inventive one. Most of the pieces composed for the organ during this period were termed Voluntaries, and frequently contained solo passages of a florid character for the right-hand on a compound stop known as the Cornet—now obsolete—accompanied by a single bass part for the left-hand. Sometimes the solo passages were for a Trumpet, Flute, or other stop. The Voluntary period lasted throughout the 18th and for the earlier part of the 19th centuries. Among the best composers of Voluntaries and Fugues during the 18th century were: Dr. Maurice Greene, Thomas Roseingrave, John Travers, John Bennett, Dr. William Boyce, Dr. James Nares, John Stanley, Dr. Benjamin Cooke, Dr. T. S. Dupuis and Jonathan Battisill.

The 'Cornet solo' type of Voluntary was not yet extinct when the organ compositions of Samuel Wesley appeared. Many of Wesley's pieces contain really fine music, and exhibit a noble effort to uphold the dignity of the 'king of instruments.' William Russell wrote some good and interesting Voluntaries, in which registering indications are more frequently and minutely given than in the music of his predecessors.

The Fugues by Dr. William Crotch are, on the whole, somewhat dry and laboured, but those by Thomas Adams are more interesting, and are eminently suited to the character of the instrument.

Samuel Wesley's good influences in the domain of organ music were richly inherited by his son, Samuel Sebastian Wesley. But the organ compositions of the latter may be said to mark the beginning of the modern era, and are therefore outside the limits of the present paper.

Drs. W. H. Cummings, T. Lea Southgate and C. D. Maclean took part in the discussion which ensued.

The following were the musical illustrations played by Dr. Alcock:

Voluntary (from the Mulliner MS. book)	.. Richard Alwood
Fantasia on the Flemish Choral 'Laet ons met herten reijne' Dr. John Bull Voluntary in A minor Orlando Gibbons
Toccata in A minor Matthew Lock
Toccata for a 'Double Organ' Dr. John Blow
Voluntary on the south Psalm tune Henry Purcell
Allegro (Cornet solo) from Voluntary in G minor Dr. William Boyce
Prelude and Fugue in A Samuel Wesley

The annual dinner took place on the same day at the Criterion Restaurant, under the chairmanship of Sir Frederick Bridge.

MR. PLUNKET GREENE ON INTERPRETATION IN SONG.

The art of interpretation in song is a subject upon which there is so much confusion of ideas, weak judgment, and ignorance displayed upon public concert-platforms, that a lecture on this topic by no less an authority and master than Mr. Plunket Greene was particularly welcome. Such a lecture was given at Æolian Hall on November 11. There was so much sound sense and practical advice, æsthetic as well as technical, in Mr. Greene's remarks, that they ought to be propagated far and wide over the musical community. There was also a grace and lightness of touch in the presentation of his thoughts, and an abundance of amusing asides, that made the lecture attractive apart from its value as education.

The lecturer prefaced his remarks with an apology for their necessarily egotistical character. The ideas he was about to express were based entirely upon his own methods and experience. No one had been consulted. If the expressions 'you must' or 'one must' occurred, they were to be taken as meaning 'I must.'

When he first approached his subject through the medium of his own mental processes as an interpreter of song, and looked for the rules he followed, he found to his dismay he was not conscious of obeying any. He had to begin at the other end, and by a process of analysis arrive at what he was looking for. He then found that he was all the time obeying a set of definite rules quite unconsciously. The necessary equipment of an artistic singer, Mr. Greene said, could be divided under four general heads: Technique; magnetism; a sense of atmosphere; and command of tone-colour. There were no short cuts to the attainment of technique, and no resting or finality in its study. Magnetism, which Mr. Greene so described for want of a better word, was an influence that passed between a singer and his audience mutually, the power to exert it on the singer's part being a gift. A breath would blow it away, and nothing destroyed it more effectually than the entrance of a late-comer into the concert hall, when every eye turned away and everyone's attention was diverted. It could never be exerted whilst the singer's eyes were fixed upon a music-sheet. (Here Mr. Greene dwelt upon the paramount importance of memorising works.) He added that it was possible for the artist to feel the magnetism of his audience and to be inspired by it. Even one single friendly and interested face among an unsympathetic throng could suffice. Referring to his third heading, the lecturer said that every song had an atmosphere of its own which must be felt and thoroughly understood by the artist. The song and its mood or atmosphere must be conceived as a whole. To effect this it required a vivid pictorial imagination, by which the suggested mental picture or emotional state could be summoned and retained. The so-called 'atmospheric' songs were usually based upon some 'master phrase' which gave the key of the mood. Tone-colour was described in terms of a definition once given by Mr. Walter Ford: 'It is the vitalization of the breath before adding it to the spoken word.' The power to control tone-colour should be as much a temperamental as a technical asset. The colour-changes should follow almost unconsciously the changes of mood, in response to the call of the imagination. This subconscious power was one of the strongest weapons in the singer's armoury. But it could never stand for a moment against that curse of the average English singer, self-consciousness.

Mr. Greene then propounded three rules which must be observed by all who would interpret a song thoroughly. In the first place the rhythm of the song must be religiously preserved. The necessity of taking breath should never under any circumstances whatever be allowed, as it so often was, to interrupt the march of the rhythm. It was no praise to say of an accompanist, 'How well he followed the singer,' but rather an accusation. The rhythm was the accompanist's care as much as the singer's, and when the latter ill-treated, the former should endeavour to protect the rhythm. Here the lecturer digressed upon the importance of the accompanist's function: the pianist was the singer's fellow-artist and mentor, and often he alone could avert disaster. Mr. Greene took the opportunity of paying a tribute of thanks and praise to Mr. S. Liddle (to whom he attributed all the virtues of an accompanist), as one who, in a long association with him, had ideally fulfilled all those conditions.

The second rule was: Sing mentally through the rests. From the first introductory note on the pianoforte to the final note of the concluding symphony the singer should be taking part with his 'mental voice' if the singing voice was silent. This was the secret of singing the song as a whole; the secret of interpretation. The third rule was that singing should be speech in music. Words should be pronounced in singing just as they were in conversation, with regard to the vowel-sounds and to the relative value of accented and unaccented syllables, and to the texture of the quality of voice.

At the end, Mr. Greene summarised his lecture as follows: (1) Granted the gifts of technique and the observance of the rules; (2) Find the atmosphere of your song, and (a) Sing it as a whole, (b) Sing it as you would speak it.

The lecturer then added example to precept, and sang songs from the following selection, with explanations of the way he approached their interpretation:

Der Leiermann	Schubert
Der Doppelgänger	Schubert
Ein Ton	Cornelius
Vergleiches Ständchen	Brahms
A lover's garland	Hubert Parry
Ethiopia saluting the Colours	Charles Wood
The fairy lough	C. V. Stanford
When children plays	H. Walford Davies
Corinna's going a-Maying	Ernest Walker
O ye dead	Old Irish,
Molly Brannigan	arr. by C. V. Stanford.
Quick, we have but a second }

Mr. Liddle accompanied. The audience was large, distinguished, and appreciative. Mr. Greene will deal again with the topic on December 2, at Æolian Hall, and should attract a large audience.

MISS MARIE BREMA'S OPERA SEASON.

A season of opera that promises to be of considerable artistic value and interest was opened by Miss Marie Brema at the Savoy Theatre on November 15. Miss Brema at once began with something uncommon, by giving an entirely novel version of Handel's setting, in cantata form, of Dryden's 'L'Allegro ed il Penseroso.' The plan she adopted was not that of turning the poem into an opera, but of having the music sung by invisible singers while the incidents referred to in the verse were illustrated by a series of 'living pictures' on the stage. The result is exceedingly beautiful, for the scenes have been arranged in the very best taste with most vivid realisation of the pictures suggested by the words, and with an excellent grasp of stage effect. The piece becomes a species of masque, but whatever the term applied to it, the fact remains that the spectacle presented is very charming and gratifying to eye and ear alike. The plan adopted of keeping the singers out of sight enabled the audience to concentrate their attention on the stage, where all the personages and events mentioned in the text—the Loathed Melancholy, Jov, Mirth, the exponents of the 'Light fantastic toe,' the Ploeghman, the Pensive Nun and the parties in the Morris dance—are all shown in turn while the music proceeds. The poem has become engrained in our natures—on re-reading it, one feels with the man who found Shakespeare's 'Hamlet' full of quotations, and our pleasure in hearing the poem and the delightfully rural music Handel wrote to it is augmented by the singularly happy way in which Miss Brema puts it before us. The solo portions are admirably sung by Miss Evangeline Florence, Mr. Spencer Thomas and Mr. Francis Braun, and as chiefs among the stage exponents Miss Hermione Stewart (Melancholy) and Miss Ruby Ginner, a most graceful dancer who impersonates Mirth, are entitled to all praise.

As an accompaniment and as the complement of the evening's entertainment, a version of the well-known fairy tale of the 'Two Hunchbacks,' written by M. Emile Cammaerts, and translated into English by Miss Tita Brand, is represented. It is a most charming display, in which youthful exponents of King Pit and Queen Zit (Master Griffinhoofe and Miss Nonny Locke) with their offspring, Little Pit (Miss Mavis Yorke), at once captivated the hearts of the audience. The parts of the 'grown-ups' are taken by Miss Tita Brand, Mr. Vernon Steel and Mr. Michael Sherbrooke with effect, and the piece was well received and is likely to be found among the Christmas attractions. As interludes, Mr. Frank Bridge, who directs the orchestra, has provided some well-conceived arrangements of Breton folk-songs, which are appropriate to the surroundings, as the scene is laid in the Belgian Ardennes.

GLUCK'S 'ORPHEUS.'

Subsequently Miss Marie Brema revived her admirable version of Gluck's 'Orpheus.' Her performances given during the summer attracted a good deal of attention for their artistic character, and that character is well maintained in the present representations. Miss Brema herself appears as Orpheus, and gives a fine, vigorous reading of the part, full of meaning gesture and admirable vocalisation. Miss Gladys Honey is the Eurydice, and bears herself with grace, though her singing is at times uncertain. Miss Doris Simpson is the Amor, and Miss Ginner, Miss Una Reynolds, and Mr. Allan Glyn act as principal dancers. The scene of the Underworld is still impressive, and that of the Elysian Fields remains a picture of entrancing beauty. There is an excellent chorus, who work with the best of will, and the three productions are clearly likely to prove a strong attraction.

BEECHAM OPERA SEASON.

Novelties have been in abeyance; and operas such as 'Faust' and 'Rigoletto' have crept into the scheme and somewhat mitigated the daring of Mr. Beecham's operations. Yet the interest has been continuous, for the operas have been well mounted and performed, and well-known singers have taken up familiar rôles for the first time and thrown new light upon them. At least one artist, Miss Mignon Nevada, has won and established her reputation.

The centre of interest in the latter half of October was the production of 'Fidelio,' on October 22. Miss Gleeson-White, on the indisposition of Miss Edyth Walker, took up the part of Fidelio at short notice, and played it with ability. On October 24, Fräulein Plaichinger took the title-part in 'Elektra,' and answered its requirements in everything except vocal stamina. In 'Rigoletto' on October 25, Miss Nevada appeared as Gilda and scored an immediate success, both by her refined singing and by her clever and girlish (she is understood to be under twenty) acting. Signor de Luca was a magnificent Jester, and Signor Bendielli an attractive Duke. He was succeeded in a later production by Signor Macnez.

Mr. Beecham seldom does anything better or more commendable than his Mozart revivals. In his hands all the sparkling life and beauty of the music comes to the surface. Such impressions were confirmed by the performances of 'Don Giovanni,' on October 27, with Misses Gleeson-White, Perceval Allen and Ruth Vincent as prime donne, and Signor de Luca as the Don; and 'Figaro,' on October 29, with Miss Elizabeth Amnden as the Countess, Miss Beatrice La Palme as Susanna, Miss Maggie Teyte as Cherubino, and Mr. Lewis James as Figaro.

The success of 'Faust,' on November 1, hinged on that of Miss Maggie Teyte as Marguerite, which was unequivocal. Both her delivery of the music and her acting were such as to deepen the character and hold the dramatic interest. The performance of 'Tannhäuser,' on November 5, was marked by the successful embodiment of the conflicting rôles of Venus and Elizabeth by Fräulein Petzl-Perard. 'Il Barbiere di Siviglia,' on November 12, gave Miss Nevada a further opportunity of distinguishing herself. 'Tristan' was given on November 19, with Fräulein Plaichinger and Herr Ernest Kraus as the chief characters.

Besides the operas mentioned, 'Tales of Hoffmann' and 'Hansel and Gretel' have been mounted. Attention is now upon 'Salome,' from which we understand the Censor's veto has been removed.

A remarkable programme, with Delius's 'Brigg Fair' as its central point, was offered at the Sunday concert on November 13.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

The almost total abandonment of Schumann's 'Genoveva,' owing to the dramatic deficiencies of the music, is not to be wondered at, but it is to be regretted, as it means the neglect of much that is beautiful. Its revival by the Royal College at His Majesty's Theatre, on November 18, probably suggested by the Schumann Centenary, was therefore an event of some interest. The performance was worthy of the attention it attracted, as far as the singing and acting were concerned. The principals were Miss Clytie Hine (Genoveva), Miss Matilda Bodycombe (Margaret, the witch), Mr. George Baker (Siegfried), and Mr. David Ellis (Golo). The orchestra was not up to the standard of previous achievements by the College. The chorus was efficient, and the mounting sumptuous. Mr. Richard Temple was the stage-manager, and Sir Charles Stanford conducted.

Preliminary examinations for twelve free open scholarships will be held on February 1, 1911, in various local centres throughout the United Kingdom. The scholarships to be competed for are as follows: two composition, one pianoforte, two singing (female only), one organ, three violin, viola, or violoncello, one clarinet, one bassoon, one horn. The scholarships are open to all classes of His Majesty's subjects within the ages stated in the particulars issued to applicants. Information may be obtained from the Registrar.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' was again chosen by this Society for the opening of their season at the Albert Hall on November 3. The performance given did not surpass their previous achievements in dramatic point and depth of expression, but it was dignified and, by virtue of the bulk and richness of the choir's tone, impressive. The soloists were Madame Agnes Nicholls, Madame Kirkby Lunn, Mr. Morgan Kingston, and Mr. Edmund Burke. Sir Frederick Bridge conducted, and Mr. H. L. Balfour was at the organ.

THE LONDON CHORAL SOCIETY.

The first concert of the season given by this Society on October 26, at Queen's Hall, proved that its zeal for the production of works not given elsewhere in London is in no way abated. The organization seems to be in a healthy condition, and as it allies itself to the London Symphony Orchestra, the resources are on the whole exceptionally good. The concert brought forward four works performed for the first time in London. Two were choral cantatas by Mr. Bertram Shapleigh. The first, for tenor solo, chorus and orchestra, has the not very exhilarating title of 'The lake of the dismal swamp,' the words of which are by Thomas Moore. The music displays excellent musicianship, and has besides some general interest, although it did not seem eerie enough for the words. The other cantata was a setting of the Vedic hymn of Sanskrit origin for double chorus and orchestra. This at first was very striking in its colour and treatment, but became comparatively dull at the conclusion. The other novelties, both for chorus and orchestra, were by Dr. Ethel Smyth. The first was a setting of D. G. Rossetti's fine and suggestive poem, 'Sleepless dreams.' The music has much originality and beauty. There is one especially powerful climax that was thrilling in its intensity. A 'Hey Nonny No!' (from a Christ Church manuscript, 16th century) supplied the words for the second piece. Here again Dr. Smyth provides a constant stream of fancifulness. The rhythm seemed not to be varied sufficiently, and the length of the work too great for the subject-matter. All the same, there was always interest. The remainder of the concert was taken up by Parts II. and III. of Granville Bantock's 'Omar Khayyam,' with the London performance of which this Society is identified. This fine work was performed with great effect and with the ease that comes with familiarity. Mr. Arthur Fagge conducted, and the soloists were Miss Phyllis Lett, Mr. Gregory Hast, and Mr. Herbert Brown. The orchestra was led by Mr. Arthur Payne.

QUEEN'S HALL CHORAL SOCIETY.

Concert-performances of opera have obvious disadvantages, but a solid compensation is offered as a rule in the opportunity of reading the libretto or score. The above Society, in performing an extended selection from 'Parsifal,' at Queen's Hall, on November 15, chose to adopt only the disadvantages, and sang to a darkened auditorium. After the preparation and sale of sixpenny programmes containing the words in full and copious musical quotations, this action was inconsistent, and provoked outspoken comment both at the time and subsequently in the Press. Moreover, the performers were partially screened from view by a row of tall palms, which effectively obscured the none too clear diction of the soloists and chorus, with the result that from beginning to end scarcely a word could be caught by the listener. The whole proceeding was lacking in practical and æsthetic judgment, and aroused the spirit of annoyance rather than reverence. The best course under the circumstances was to shut one's eyes and listen to the glorious orchestral music. For the chance of doing even this some gratitude is due to Mr. Franco Leoni and his Society. The chief soloists were Mr. Morgan Kingston (Parsifal), Mr. Thorpe Bates (Amfortas), Mr. Wilfrid Douthitt (Gurnemanz), Mr. Marcus Thomson (Titurel); Madame Ada Davies and five other ladies sang the flower-maiden music. Gounod's 'Gallia,' with Madame Davies as soloist, preceded 'Parsifal.'

LONDON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The first of what promises to be an exceptionally interesting series of concerts took place at Queen's Hall on October 24, under the direction of Mr. Thomas Beecham and Dr. Richter. To the care of the former were entrusted Berlioz's 'Carneval' overture and Holbrooke's highly imaginative Prelude to 'Dylan,' upon which we have favourably commented before. It again gave the impression of being one of Mr. Holbrooke's most effective works, as, in spite of its imagination and exuberance, it is continuously well-reasoned. The works conducted by Dr. Richter were the 'Siegfried Idyll' and Dvorák's Violoncello concerto, in which Señor Pablo Casals gave a splendid interpretation, exhibiting all his surpassing skill in execution and beauty of tone. He also played an unaccompanied Bach Suite.

The feature of the concert given on November 7 was the first performance in London of Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's rhapsodic dance 'The Bamboula.' This is based upon the rhythm and melodic outline of the first four notes of a traditional West Indian dance, from which the name is borrowed. In common with the greater portion of the composer's works, it is free from over-ambitious depth of meaning, and appeals to artistic and popular favour by its frank melodiousness, rhythmic vigour, and effective, bright scoring. Mr. Coleridge-Taylor conducted a spirited performance and received much applause. The remainder of the programme, which Dr. Richter conducted, included Beethoven's fourth Symphony; Brahms's first Pianoforte concerto, with Miss Katherine Goodson as soloist; and two of Sir Alexander Mackenzie's 'Manfred' preludes, 'Pastorale' and 'Flight of the spirits.' The sanity, musicianship and picturesque but unaggressive imagination shown in these last-mentioned works were appreciated.

Mr. Holbrooke was again prominently concerned as composer and conductor at the third concert, on November 21. He directed the first performance of his 'Song of Gwyn-ap-Nudd,' a symphonic-poem in the form of a pianoforte concerto illustrating verses by Mr. T. E. Ellis. The bearing of the music on the subject was not always obvious, but its characteristic animation and boldness secured interested attention. Mr. Harold Bauer played the solo part. Schubert's 'Unfinished' and Brahms's second symphonies were conducted by Dr. Richter, whose presence has been the real mainstay of these concerts.

QUEEN'S HALL SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

There was little that calls for particular description at the second and third concerts of this series on November 5. Herr Backhaus's pianoforte playing, exhibited in a cleanly executed performance of Chopin's second Concerto, and Dr. Walford Davies's vigorous and thoughtful 'Festal' overture, conducted by the composer, were the chief attractions. Debussy's nocturne, 'Fêtes,' and Beethoven's second Symphony completed the programme. Two Danish artists, Miss Ellen Beck (vocalist) and Miss Johann Stockmarr (pianist) lent distinction to the concert given on November 19. The former was heard in the final scene from 'Götterdämmerung,' and the latter in Grieg's A minor Concerto, for which she showed great sympathy. M. Chabrier's 'España,' Beethoven's first Symphony, and the 'Midsummer Night's Dream' overture were also played. Mr. Henry J. Wood conducted.

London Concerts.

AMATEUR ORCHESTRAS.

The Strolling Players' Orchestral Society opened their twenty-ninth season at Queen's Hall on November 3 with a programme in which Mozart's G minor Symphony and Guilman's Organ concerto in D minor (Op. 42) were the chief points of interest. The latter work was finely played by Dr. W. G. Alcock, whose efforts were well backed-up by the orchestra, under Mr. J. Ivimey. The vocalists of the occasion were Miss Edith Kirkwood and Mr. Charles Victor.

The Royal Amateur Orchestral Society gave a concert at Queen's Hall on November 9, under Mr. Arthur W. Payne's direction. The chief feature, a performance of the 'Erica' symphony, was of notable excellence for an amateur body, and did great credit to both conductor and players. The vocalist was Madame Polozoff, who sang a familiar excerpt from 'La Bohème.'

The Stock Exchange Choral and Orchestral Society, conducted by Mr. Allen Gill, announce concerts to be given at Queen's Hall on December 9, February 2, and April 6. At the first, M. Szigeti has undertaken to play the Beethoven Violin concerto.

The annual benefit concert to Mr. Robert Newman, given on November 2, was a distinguished occasion, as Herr Kreisler took an extensive part in it. His contributions were Bach's Concerto in E and that of Mendelssohn. The symphony was Beethoven's C minor, of which Mr. Wood gave a dignified and careful reading.

The Queen's Hall Orchestra paid a visit to the East-End on November 12, to take part in a concert under the auspices of the Oxford House Musical and Dramatic Association, at Excelsior Hall, Bethnal Green. The chief orchestral numbers in a popular selection were the 'Peer Gynt' suite and '1812' overture. Lady Speyer played a Bach Concerto in E and the last movement of the Mendelssohn Concerto. The most gratifying feature of the occasion was the rapt attention and evident appreciation shown by the audience.

The New Symphony Orchestra opened their interesting series of concerts with a Wagner programme at Queen's Hall on November 16, under the direction of Mr. Landon Ronald, who retains his position as permanent conductor of the orchestra. 'Rienzi,' 'Tannhäuser,' 'Lohengrin,' 'Die Walküre,' 'Tristan,' and 'Parsifal' were represented, and the 'Siegfried Idyll' was played in addition. Miss Perceval Allen sang 'Elizabeth's greeting,' 'Elsa's dream,' and 'Isolda's Liebestod.'

VOCAL RECITALS.

Miss Viola Damori and Mr. Harold Loscomb gave a joint vocal recital at Bechstein Hall on October 27. On November 1 the 'English child Patti,' otherwise Miss Catherine Arkandy, sang nicely at Steinway Hall. Mr. Harry Alexander, who was once, we believe, famous on the Rugby football field, gave an interesting vocal recital at Æolian Hall on November 2, at which he brought forward some traditional Irish songs, and sang them expressively. On November 3, Mr. Charles Copland and his pupils gave a recital of English song at Bechstein Hall, and Mr. Lawrence Kellie again sang and accompanied his own songs at Steinway Hall.

Recitals were given by the pupils of Miss Fannie Kreuz at Trinity College of Music on November 7; by Miss Maud Barlow at Æolian Hall on November 8; and by Miss Elma Baker at Bechstein Hall on November 14.

Madame Ida Reman made her first and only appearance this season on November 15, at Bechstein Hall, and sang a long and varied list of songs with all her outstanding ability. Fräulein Gerhardt's inimitable lieder singing as usual attracted a large audience, and roused great enthusiasm at Bechstein Hall on November 17. The following day Miss Maggie Teyte gave an interesting recital of modern French songs at Æolian Hall, and achieved success largely by the magnetic attraction of her personality.

PIANOFORTE RECITALS.

Mr. William Spencer, who has recently joined the teaching staff of the Cologne Conservatoire, gave a successful recital at Bechstein Hall on October 24, with a programme that included d'Albert's transcription of Bach's Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor for organ, and Beethoven's 'Hammerklavier' sonata.

Two pianoforte recitals were given on October 25: Miss Adelaide Dodgson at the Bechstein Hall, and Herr Paul Goldschmidt at the Steinway Hall. Both made good use of their ability. The latter artist made further appearances on November 1 and 8.

On October 31, a highly successful recital was given at Steinway Hall by the Danish pianist, Mr. Viggo Kihl. His programme was a varied selection of familiar works, which he interpreted with attractive and well-chosen expression and with unflinching skill. The principal numbers were Beethoven's thirty-two Variations in C minor and Sonata in F major (Op. 10, No. 2), and Chopin's B flat minor Sonata.

Pianoforte recitals were given at Bechstein Hall on November 4 by Miss Lucy Polgreen (afternoon) and Miss Ellen Edwards (evening). The latter brought forward some new 'Sketches' by Mr. Frank Bridge entitled 'April,' 'Souvenir' and 'Petite valse-capricieuse.' At Steinway Hall Miss Maria Carreras showed herself a skilled pianist and, particularly in Beethoven's Sonata in D minor, Op. 31, revealed considerable intellectual interpretative power. She gave a second recital on November 7.

For her recital of Mozart's pianoforte music, given at Æolian Hall on November 3, Mrs. Lee Mathews had the valuable assistance of the Queen's Hall Orchestra, under Mr. Henry J. Wood. The works chosen were the Concertos in D minor and A major. On November 8, Miss Dorothy Grinstead was heard in a varied programme at Bechstein Hall.

Miss Elsie Horne gave a recital and played in highly attractive style, both as regards expression and finish of execution, at Æolian Hall, on November 5. Her programme introduced, for the first time, six 'Pictures from Greece,' by Mr. Harry Farjeon. Miss Florence Freeman sang.

The historical plan has been adopted by Mr. Herbert Fryer for his pianoforte recitals this season. On November 9, he dealt with Handel and Bach, and with French and Italian composers of their period. His programme on November 16 was chosen from Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven and Schubert.

M. de Pachmann gave a characteristic recital before a large audience at Queen's Hall on November 10. Half of his programme was, as usual, devoted to Chopin. Mr. Harold Bauer played Schumann's 'Fantaisie' in C major and other familiar works at the Crystal Palace on November 12.

Mr. Wilhelm Behre gave a recital at Æolian Hall on November 17, at which he introduced, with the help of Mr. Harold Craxton at a second pianoforte, his own improvements in the accompaniment of Chopin's concertos.

Señor Vianna Da Motta gave the first of two recitals at Bechstein Hall on November 17, including in his programme Beethoven's Sonata, Op. 109, and Franck's Prélude, Air, and Finale.

VIOLIN RECITALS.

Two further appearances have been made by M. Ysaye at Queen's Hall. On October 26 the portion of his programme devoted to old violin music included a 'Sonata seria' by Friedrich Wilhelm Rust, a composer of fine powers who had the misfortune to be eclipsed by greater men. An earlier example was a Sonata in A minor by Veracini. At the second recital, which took place on November 9, a Nardini sonata represented the older style. The remainder of the programme introduced the popular element in the form of Vieuxtemps's Concerto No. 4, in D, and the Mendelssohn Concerto. M. Ysaye's consummate mastery never failed him on either occasion, and much regret was felt that he would not perform in London again during the season.

Signor Antonio de Grassi, a pupil of M. Ysaye, made his first appearance in England at Queen's Hall on October 25, and showed himself a violinist of the front rank. He gave a second recital on November 11.

M. Marcel Bonnemain made his first appearance in London with a violin recital at Bechstein Hall on October 28.

On October 29, Miss Pearl Mitchell entered the ranks of performing prodigy violinists with a recital at Steinway Hall.

Previous to departing on an extended tour in America, Mr. John Dunn gave a farewell recital at Bechstein Hall on October 31. His programme included the Mendelssohn Concerto and Sarasate's 'Zigeunerweisen.' On the same evening Miss Ethel Friedman (violinist) gave a recital at Æolian Hall in conjunction with Madame Amy Dewhurst (vocalist).

Mr. Sasha Culbertson's re-appearance at Bechstein Hall on November 2 indicated a distinct advance in his talents, which are still disproportionate to his years. His performance of a difficult Concerto by Ernst was a remarkable display of precocious technique and a promise of future artistic maturity.

Mr. Sigmund Beel's solid style of interpretation was exhibited and justly admired at Bechstein Hall on November 11. At the same Hall, on November 18, Miss Marian Jay gave a successful recital.

Herr Kreisler's recital, in which, as usual, much attention was given to old violin music, attracted a large audience to the Crystal Palace on November 19.

OTHER RECITALS.

An interesting combined recital was given at Æolian Hall, on November 1, by Miss Pitt Soper (vocalist) and Miss Adela Hamaton (pianist). Miss Pitt Soper brought forward a group of six highly attractive 'Rispetti' by M. Wolf-Ferrari, and Miss Hamaton was heard in a remarkable Sonata in B flat minor by M. Julius Reubke.

Miss Anna Mather's recitations at Steinway Hall on November 2 were supplemented with solos played by Mr. Detmar Dressel (violin), Mr. Otto Dressel (pianoforte), and Miss Maud Estlin Grundy (harp); altogether the programme was highly attractive.

At Miss Maud Amory's dramatic and humorous recital, given on November 3, at Steinway Hall, the musical doings included violoncello solos played by M. Julien Cholet, of the Brussels Conservatoire, who on this occasion made his first appearance in London.

A pleasant joint recital was given at Bechstein Hall, on November 10, by Miss May Elliot, who played Macdowell's 'Sonata Tragica' for the pianoforte, and Mr. Clive Carey, who contributed songs.

Herr Hans Neumann (violinist) and Herr Willibald Richter (pianist) played sonatas by Bach, Beethoven and Brahms, and a suite by Schütt, at Steinway Hall, on November 10.

Two recitals, in which British music played an important part, were given by Miss Winifred Christie (pianist) and Mr. Rowsby Woof (violinist) at Bechstein Hall on October 22 and 29.

A joint recital of an unusual character was given by Miss Hélène Dolmetsch and Miss Dorothy Moggridge at Æolian Hall on November 4. A large part of the programme was devoted to ancient music, which was performed upon the instruments for which it was written. Miss Dolmetsch played a Concerto by Pfeiffer for viola da gamba, accompanied by strings and harpsichord, and also some viola da gamba solos by Caix a' Herveleis. Miss Moggridge was heard in modern pianoforte solos.

Mr. Béla von Csuka, a young violoncellist, showed great promise in the course of his recital at Bechstein Hall on November 15.

Miss Mabel Marx (vocalist) and Miss Nora Hastings (reciter) gave a pleasant little recital at Steinway Hall on November 16.

Mr. Sivori Levey recited poems to pianoforte accompaniment, composed and played by himself, at Steinway Hall on November 19.

CHAMBER CONCERTS.

Under this heading there is much of interest to report. We have been visited by several of the most distinguished quartet parties the Continent can offer, and in the face of such competition English parties have been attracting attention by their excellent work.

The Strings Club made a new departure on the occasion of their concert at Steinway Hall, on October 22, by admitting music for a wind instrument into their programme. The usual string players, Messrs. Alfred Gibson, Wynn Reeves, Alfred Hobday, and W. E. Whitehouse were joined by Mr. Charles Draper in a performance of Brahms's Clarinet quintet. Mr. Henry R. Bird was the pianist in Mozart's E flat Trio for pianoforte, clarinet, and viola.

A ladies' string quartet from Manchester, composed of Miss Edith Robinson, Miss Isabel McCullagh (violins), Miss Lily Simms (viola), and Miss Mary McCullagh (violoncello), gave a concert at Bechstein Hall on October 25. The ambition indicated by their choice of Brahms's Clarinet quintet (in which they were joined by Mr. H. Mortimer) was justified in their playing, which was skilful and full of attractive spirit and expression. They also played quartets by Schumann (Op. 41, No. 2) and Mozart (K. 465).

The Wessely Quartet gave a clever reading of the Debussy Quartet, Op. 10, at Bechstein Hall on October 26. Their programme included the Mozart Quartet mentioned above, and Schumann's Pianoforte quintet, in which Miss Fanny Davies was the pianist.

An extraordinarily beautiful performance of Debussy's work was the feature of the concert given by the Flonzaley Quartet at Bechstein Hall on November 1.

The St. Petersburg Quartet came over with a new leader, Mr. Grigorawitsch, to give a concert at Bechstein Hall on November 8, and surprised even their old admirers with the perfection of their playing. Their programme, which consisted entirely of Russian music, moved the critic of the Westminster Gazette to question 'how long it would be before it became possible for an English quartet visiting St. Petersburg to rely to a like extent on British works?' The works performed were Quartets by Rheinhold Gliere (Op. 21), Arensky (Op. 35A) and Tchaikovsky (in F minor).

The Klinger Quartet took part in a concert given by the Classical Concert Society at Bechstein Hall on November 9. Their programme consisted of Quartets by Mozart (K. 516) and Beethoven (Op. 131). The playing was marked by the appropriate delicacy or breadth, and always by the nicety of its ensemble. At other concerts given by this Society, Señor Casals has again been the centre of interest.

The London Trio, whose design is to play all Beethoven's trios in chronological order, embarked upon the project at Æolian Hall on November 14, with a performance of the Trio in E flat major (Op. 1, No. 1). This comparatively simple music they invested with a dignity and significance that raised the interpretation far above the ordinary level. The soloists of the occasion were Miss Esther Palliser (vocalist) and Mr. Simonetti (violinist).

At the Broadwood concert given on November 10, the Bohemian Quartet—Messrs. Karel Hoffmann, Josef Suk, Georg Herold, and Hanus Wihan—gave completely satisfying performances of Mozart's 'Hunting' quartet and Schubert's Quartet in E flat (Op. 125, No. 1).

Students' chamber concerts have been given by the Royal College of Music on October 26, November 3 and 16. The Royal Academy of Music gave a chamber concert on November 16 at Queen's Hall, when Mr. F. Corder's 'Elegy' for twenty-four violins and organ was specially performed in memory of a gifted lady student and professor of the Academy, Miss Mary Burgess. A manuscript Quartet movement by Mr. Arthur Alexander (Sterndale Bennett scholar) earned well-deserved admiration.

On November 16, Madame Hill Rivington appeared at Steinway Hall as violinist and composer. She led a party of ladies in the performance of her own second Quartet, in which there was much to praise. The programme also included songs, a Violin sonata, and a Suite for violin, viola and violoncello, all by Madame Rivington.

Mr. Joseph Holbrooke announces three concerts of modern chamber music to be given at Steinway Hall on December 19, January 20, and February 17, with the assistance of the Saunders and New Quartets. The concerted pieces chosen are from the works of Reger, Franck, Strauss, and Holbrooke, whose Clarinet and String quintet, Op. 31, will be performed for the first time. On December 19, the first performance in London of a Pianoforte trio by Reger is promised.

An excellent recital was given at Æolian Hall, on October 25, by Miss Mary Crocroft (pianist) and Miss Zoe Pyne (violinist). Miss Crocroft's solo contributions were transcriptions of six of Bach's choral-vorspiele for organ and two of Liszt's pianoforte tone-poems. The two artists in conjunction performed the César Franck Sonata and a Concerto in D minor by Bach.

The three brothers Cherniavski—Jan (pianist), Mischel (violinist), and Leo (violoncellist)—gave a concert at Queen's Hall on October 31. They have long been known as youthful prodigies, and this occasion served to show that they are passing through the crucial period of adolescence without losing their attraction. The budding maturity of their style was illustrated in trios by Haydn and Tchaikovsky, and in solo pieces.

The first of the fifteenth series of Barns-Phillips concerts took place at Bechstein Hall on November 1. The principal feature was a new Sonata in G minor by Miss Ethel Barns, for violin and pianoforte, which received its second performance in London within a week. By its musically development and effective writing it advanced Miss Barns's claim to be considered one of our best lady composers. It was played on this occasion by the composer and Mr. Percy Walter, who also gave an expressive and skilful performance of Beethoven's Sonata in E flat, Op. 109. Two of Miss Barns's songs were sung by Mr. Charles Phillips for the first time.

The Great Eastern Musical Society, conducted by Mr. W. Johnson Galloway, gave a concert at the Hamilton Hall, Liverpool Street Station Hotel, on November 2. The chief of the choral numbers, which were executed efficiently by the choir of seventy male voices, was Dr. James Lyon's ballad, 'The Warden of the Cinque Ports.' The accompaniment of this work was entrusted to the orchestra, which was numerically as large as the choir. The instrumental body displayed its efficiency to still greater effect in Mr. Landon Ronald's 'Birthday overture,' a 'Pomp and Circumstance' march by Elgar, and other pieces. The occasion was a tribute to the ability of Mr. Galloway's lieutenants, Mr. H. B. Dickin, who trained the choir, and Mr. J. D. Davis, who instructed the orchestra.

Suburban Concerts.

A performance of Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' was given at a special service at St. Luke's Church, Bromley Common, on Sunday, October 23. There was an augmented choir and an adequate orchestra conducted by Mr. H. E. Wyld, organist and choirmaster. Mrs. G. A. R. Tatham presided at the organ, and Miss Gwynne Kimpton led the orchestra. The soloists, who did excellent service, were Miss Dunford, Miss Violet Bower and Mr. Bertram Pearce. At the conclusion of the service, the orchestra gave an admirable reading of the Adagio from Mendelssohn's 'Scotch' symphony.

The Dulwich Philharmonic Society opened their fifteenth season on October 29, with a concert performance of Gounod's 'Faust,' given at the Crystal Palace under Mr. Arthur Fagge's direction. The sparkling music was interpreted with appropriate spirit and well-judged use of the quality and quantity of the tone commanded by this body of singers. The soloists were Miss Norah Newport (Marguerite), Miss Elsie Simmonds (Martha and Siebel), Mr. David Evans (Valentine), Mr. William Waite (Mephistopheles), and Mr. Charles Neville (Faust), who was handicapped by a cold. Mr. C. H. Kemping was the organist.

A capital performance of Gounod's 'Mors et Vita' (part 1) was given at St. Paul's Church, Beekenhamp, on All Saints' Day, November 1. The somewhat trying soprano solos were well sung by Master Durn, from Mr. Bates's School for Choristers, and the alto, tenor and bass soloists, Messrs. Norman Newcombe, Leonard Blacknell and Herbert Linnell performed their parts creditably. The accompanists were Mr. Harland Wheeler (pianoforte) and Mr. Eustace Turner (organ). The music was under the entire direction of Mr. Eustace Turner, organist and choirmaster of the church.

Miss Edith King and Mr. Francis Thoms gave an excellent pianoforte and violin recital at the Town Hall, East Ham, on November 3, and the venture met with well-merited success. Brahms's Sonata in D minor, Op. 108, for violin and pianoforte was the chef d'œuvre of their united efforts; the solo pianoforte suite 'From the East,' composed by Mr. Thoms, was also an extremely interesting item in the programme.

MUSIC IN VIENNA.

(FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

November 15, 1910.

The unexpected news of the definite retirement of Herr Felix von Weingartner from his post as director of the Imperial Court Opera, and the appointment, simultaneously announced, of Herr Hans Gregor, the present manager of the Komische Oper, in Berlin, as his successor, occasioned general surprise, in the first instance because Herr von Weingartner has, almost up to the last moment, been strongly supported behind the scenes by the authorities; and, secondly, for the reason that his desire to resign his position can be attributed to the continual persecution he has had to endure from a certain clique. Herr Gregor will take up his new duties on April 1, 1911. As he is not a professional musician he will entrust the settlement of musical matters mainly to his conductors. Since definitely deciding upon his resignation, Herr Weingartner has been doubly fettered, particularly in his capacity as conductor of the Philharmonic concerts, where, under his guidance, the orchestra of the Imperial Opera, the members of which are very much attached to him, have given performances to which friend and foe alike could but award unreserved praise. The concerts of the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde seem to reach a continually higher level. At the first concert of the season, when the programme contained exclusively earnest and difficult choral works by Brahms, the Singverein and its excellent conductor, Herr Schalk, greatly distinguished themselves. For the rest, the deluge of concerts has already reached a point likely to prove disastrous to many enterprises. Through the opening of the new and well-designed hall belonging to the Urania Gesellschaft, the number of concert halls, and in consequence also the number of active virtuosi and vocalists, has been increased. Some of the latter, of course, came out with flying colours. The tenor, Slezak, gave an excellently attended concert before his departure for America. Thousands also went to hear Miss Destinn. Violinists were represented by Hubermann and Marteau. The subscription concerts of the Konzertverein and the Tonkünstler Orchestra have their regular patrons. In the Konzertverein, Herr Löwe is to give an entire cycle of Bruckner's symphonies. At the concerts of the Tonkünstler Orchestra, which are usually conducted by Herr Oskar Nedbal, an appearance was recently made by M. Safonoff, from Moscow. He conducted symphonies by Berlioz and Tchaikovsky, and a new Pianoforte concerto by Scriabine. The solo part was played with much effect by the composer's wife, Madame Wera Scriabina.

RICHARD VON PERGER.

Music in the Provinces.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.)

BELFAST.

On October 27, Madame Tetrzini paid her first visit here, and of course astonished a large audience by her brilliant singing and wonderful voice. Accompanying her were Miss Wena Pickering, Messrs. Morgan Kingston and Wilfred Douthitt, Miss Lilian Berger and Miss Flora Mann, with Miss Marjorie Wigley, pianist, and Mr. R. J. Forbes accompanist.

Messrs. Kubelik and Backhaus, with Herr Schwab and Miss Marie Stiven, gave a concert on November 2, and it is unnecessary to say how such distinguished artists performed.

It is well for a community to have the opportunity of hearing such exceptional talent. But visits from touring parties are not altogether beneficial, for there is only a limited fund available by patrons of music, and if it is spent on necessarily expensive miscellaneous concerts there is the less available for the support of organizations which combine the local culture of the practice of music with oratorio and orchestral performances.

BIRMINGHAM.

There has been more than an ordinary activity displayed in the musical doings of this great city, and as far as memory serves, the number of concerts provided for the current season far exceeds anything that has ever been attempted hitherto. In addition to the ordinary concerts, we had the visit of the Moody-Manners Opera Company, who gave at the Prince of Wales Theatre an interesting repertory of standard operas, extending from October 24 to 29, the novelty being the first stage performance here of Saint-Saëns's 'Samson and Delilah.' Considering the comparatively small artistic personnel of what is known as the B company, its exposition was fairly satisfactory, the principal shortcomings being the inadequacy of the orchestra. The other operas given during the week were 'Tannhäuser,' 'Faust,' 'Il Trovatore,' 'The Bohemian Girl,' and 'Carmen.'

The new Choral Society formed by Mr. Rutland Boughton for the purpose of encouraging the practice of unaccompanied choral music, gave their sixth concert (the first of this season) in the Town Hall on October 17. Excellent renderings were given of a number of part-songs, well within the range and capabilities of the choir, which now comprises about 160 mixed voices of a brilliant timbre and an even balance. The selection included Sir Hubert Parry's harmonized version of the songs, 'Phyllis' and 'If I had but two little wings,' Macdowell's male-voice part-songs, 'From the sea' and 'Dance of gnomes,' and H. Ormond Anderton's four-part song for female-voices, 'Ode to Autumn.' Mr. Rutland Boughton conducted, and showed that his careful training enabled the choir to realise not only artistic gradation of light and shade, but also musically phrasing and technical skill. Violin and pianoforte solos were respectively given by Mr. Zacharewitsch and Miss Marie Novello. Mr. Clarence Raybould acted as accompanist.

The same evening, Mr. Max Mossel held his first drawing-room concert in the Grosvenor Room, Grand Hotel, the artists being M. Joseph Hollman, Mr. Mark Hambourg and Mr. Gervase Elwes, and the accompanists, Mr. Kiddle and Mr. Manton. Especially interesting was Mr. Elwes's artistic delivery of a triad of songs by Brahms, 'Auf dem Kirchhofe,' 'Der Kuss,' and 'Wir wandelten.'

The Birmingham Choral and Orchestral Association, for their opening concert, given in the Town Hall on October 29, chose Mendelssohn's 'Elijah,' which attracted a packed audience; indeed so great was the demand for admission that hundreds were unable to get in. It really seems that 'Elijah' increases in popularity with the masses instead of decreasing as the years roll on. The performance was certainly the best this Society has ever given, and Mr. Joseph Adams, the conductor, is to be complimented on the result he achieved. The principals were Madame Laura Taylor, Madame Margaret Milward, Mr. Jesse Hackett and Mr. Thomas Howell. Owing to the unavoidable absence of Mr. C. W. Perkins the duties of organist rested with Mr. F. W. Newey.

Miss Elma Baker, a local vocalist who has studied in this country and under various masters on the Continent, gave a vocal recital at the Queen's College on October 25, at which she sang a number of Italian, German, French, and English songs in an expressive and sympathetic manner. With her were associated Mr. Everard Healey (baritone) and Miss Beatrice Hewitt (pianist). A successful concert was given in the Town Hall on October 22, by the Birmingham and District Commercial Travellers' Association, in aid of the local King Edward Memorial Fund and the Benevolent Fund of the Association. The committee had secured a quartet of well-known solo vocalists, namely, Miss Leah Felissa, Miss Lucy Nuttall, Mr. Webster Millar and Mr. Joseph Lycett. Organ solos were rendered by Mr. C. W. Perkins, and violin solos by a clever young performer, Master Charles Gilmer.

Herr Fritz Kreisler gave a violin recital in the Town Hall on November 8 with complete artistic success. The programme he submitted was calculated fully to demonstrate his versatility, and included Tartini's sonata 'Il trillo del Diavolo,' Bach's 'Chaconne,' Paganini's Caprice (No. 24), and a number of old-world pieces and compositions of his own. To each he imparted a distinctive reading, perfect in mechanism, rich in tone and above all with nobility of expression. The vocalist was Miss Mary Tomlinson and the accompanist Mr. Haddon Squire.

Messrs. Ysaye and Pugno (the latter had not previously visited Birmingham) gave a violin and pianoforte recital in the Town Hall on November 9, both artists creating an enormous sensation. To hear a violin and pianoforte sonata by Mozart, and Beethoven's immortal 'Kreutzer sonata,' interpreted with such wonderful unanimity of feeling and perfect understanding, constituted a rare musical treat. The artists were also heard in soli on their respective instruments, given with that rare finesse de jeu which only artists of the calibre of Messrs. Ysaye and Pugno can accomplish. Miss Esta d'Argo contributed a number of songs.

On November 11 a concert was given in the Town Hall by Messrs. Dale, Forty & Co., which served to introduce to local judgment the French prima donna, Mlle. Alice Verlet. With her were associated Herr Zimbalist and Herr Mark Hambourg. Mr. F. W. Sparrow was a sympathetic accompanist.

The Birmingham Choral Union revived Haydn's 'The Creation' at the Town Hall on November 12, the occasion being the first concert of the current series. There was a crowded assembly, and Mr. Thomas Facer, the conductor of the Society, is to be congratulated on an excellent all-round performance. The choir was in capital form and was well balanced, and the solo portion of the work was admirably and graphically interpreted by Miss Hettie Molineaux, Mr. Alban Cohen and Mr. Joseph Lycett. valuable support at the organ was rendered by the city organist, Mr. C. W. Perkins.

Miss Elena Gerhardt gave a 'Liederabend' at the Grosvenor Rooms, Grand Hotel, on November 15. Her repertory included songs by Schumann, Hugo Wolf and Wagner. Of special interest were the songs by Wagner, which have only lately been published by Novello & Co., with English translation by Felix Mansfield.

The Birmingham Philharmonic Society's second and third orchestral concerts of the present season were given in the Town Hall on November 2 and 16 respectively. Dr. George Henschel conducted the former and M. Wassili Safonoff the latter. The newly-formed orchestra is rapidly gaining experience and confidence, and very marked was the advance already made at the second concert, and still more so at the third. Dr. Henschel's powerful personality evidently greatly impressed the rank and file, and there was a solidity associated in their rendering of Brahms's first Symphony, Beethoven's 'Egmont' overture, and the 'Meistersinger' prelude that one missed at the first concert. Dr. Henschel also contributed songs by Schubert and Loewe in his own inimitable manner, accompanying himself at the pianoforte. M. Safonoff conducted a magnificent performance of Beethoven's 'Eroica' symphony, Brahms's 'Variations on a Haydn theme,' Tchaikovsky's fantasia 'Francesca da Rimini,' and Mendelssohn's overture 'A Midsummer night's Dream.'

BOURNEMOUTH.

A rising Bournemouth composer, Mr. H. Holloway, whose very attractive Symphony in E minor has been heard here on four occasions and has also been played in other centres, was represented at Symphony Concert No. 4, on October 27, by his 'Variations on an original theme,' which received their first performance on this occasion. In certain particulars these Variations are superior to anything he has written previously. For instance, little trivialities that aforesaid have somewhat irritated us are in this work entirely absent; the orchestration, too, shows a deeper understanding of effects; and, above all, the music has a greater measure of vitality and intensity of purpose.

Mr. Thomas Dunhill's capricious 'Variations on an old English tune,' for violoncello and orchestra (Op. 32), were produced for the first time at Symphony Concert No. 6, on November 10. The old English tune selected for treatment is 'Sally in our Alley'—a pretty melody, but one requiring very careful handling if monotony is not to prevail.

On November 15, Madame Newling's choir gave their first concert of the season in conjunction with the Municipal Orchestra. The following choral works were presented: Motet by Mr. Hamilton Law (conducted by the composer); Brahms's 'A song of destiny'; part-song, 'How sweet the moonlight sleeps,' by Mr. Hadley Watkins (conducted by the composer); unaccompanied chorus, 'Go, song of mine,' by Elgar (conducted by Madame Newling).

BRISTOL.

There was an interesting chamber concert at the Victoria Rooms on October 24. The Wessely Quartet executed effectively Beethoven's F major (Op. 18, No. 1), Schubert's G major (Op. 161), and Dvorák's Quartet in E flat (Op. 51). A large audience evidently appreciated the performance.

West Bristol Choral Society gave a concert on October 29, and there was a fair attendance in the spacious Victoria Saloon. The band and choir, numbering 100, were conducted by Mr. Charles Read (organist at St. Alban's Church). Mr. Johann W. Duys, the leader, played with skill Mendelssohn's Violin concerto. There were creditable interpretations of Schubert's 'Song of Miriam' and Elgar's 'Black Knight.'

On November 3, the Bristol Royal Orpheus Glee Society, who had been invited to sing at Gloucester in aid of the benevolent fund of the Commercial Travellers' Association, journeyed to that city. Under the direction of Mr. George Riseley, the choir, numbering about eighty, gave their concert in the Shire Hall.

The season of the Clifton Quintet commenced at the Victoria Rooms on November 10, a pleasing performance taking place at the Victoria Rooms. The players were Messrs. Herbert Parsons (pianoforte), Maurice Alexander and Ernest Lane (violins), Alfred Best (viola), and Percy Lewis (violoncello). Dohnányi's Quartet in D flat, for strings, obtained its first hearing in the city and impressed the audience by its charms.

A miscellaneous concert was given at the Victoria Rooms on November 11, the vocalists being Misses Katharine and Eveline Gerrish, and Mr. Watkin Mills, and the instrumentalists Miss Jenny Meid (pianoforte) and Mr. Maurice Alexander (violin). Miss Gerrish introduced three simple songs by Kenneth Girdlestone, a local musician, and their unaffected grace attracted the audience.

The annual concert in aid of the funds of the Men's Club was given at Stoke Bishop Hall on November 15. A well-arranged programme was carried out by several capable amateurs, and favourably received by a crowded assembly.

The Bristol Choral Society, on November 19, gave their first concert of the season at Colston Hall, under the direction of Mr. George Riseley. 'Hiawatha' was presented, and was preceded by two instrumental productions of Mr. Coleridge-Taylor, viz., a Rhapsodic dance, 'The Bamboula,' and the first extract from the incidental music for the drama 'Nero.' The cantata was admirably performed, chorus and band numbering 500. Miss Mabel Manson, Mr. Samuel Masters and Mr. William Higley were the soloists, and Mr. Harold Bernard was leader of the orchestra.

DEVON AND CORNWALL.

THE THREE TOWNS.

The subscription series of Symphony Concerts directed by Mr. R. G. Evans started auspiciously on November 4 with a large audience and well-selected programme. A prominent feature in the programme was the Beethoven Violin concerto, with Miss Helen Sealy, a highly-gifted and high-principled artist, as soloist. On November 8, in Stonehouse Town Hall, Mr. J. W. Newton, the newly-appointed bandmaster of the Royal Marine Light Infantry in succession to Mr. Frank Winterbottom, gave another first event. With the commendable aim of developing the resources of wind instruments in the band, he brought forward Mr. F. Matthews as clarinet soloist in Weber's Concerto. Two movements from Dvorák's String quartet, Op. 96, were delightfully played by Messrs. Wellington, Wills, Dalling and Pike. Mr. H. Moreton's Guildhall Choir returned to public life on October 22, and, with the assistance of a band of over 70, efficiently carried out a programme that included Dr. Hugh Blair's 'Trafalgar' and Stanford's 'Last Post.'

On November 16, Mr. Percy Lowman and Mr. Harold Lake gave their second violin and pianoforte recital in Plymouth.

The choir of Mount Guld Wesleyan Church performed, with orchestra, Stainer's 'The daughter of Jairus,' Mendelssohn's 'Hear my prayer,' the 'Gloria' from Mozart's twelfth Mass, and other sacred items. Mr. N. H. R. Normington conducted, with Mr. David Parkes at the organ. Sherwell Choir, a bright-toned body of 60 voices, sang part-songs on November 17, conducted by Mr. A. C. Faull. Organ playing has recently gained impetus from the acquirement of several new church organs. A series of recitals on the new instrument in St. Simon's Church was inaugurated, on November 14, by Mr. H. Moreton. Two recitals have been given by the organist of St. Catharine's, Mr. Manley Martin, after evensong respectively on October 23 and November 13. Modern French music chiefly constituted the former programme.

The Western Amateur Operatic Society surpassed all previous records by their excellent performances of 'The Mikado' at the Theatre Metropole at Devonport, from October 31 to November 5, given under the direction of Mr. Edward Astbury. An operetta, 'Caught napping,' was performed by children on November 8, under the direction of Mrs. G. H. Fewins.

OTHER DEVONSHIRE TOWNS.

Paignton Operatic Society have decided to produce 'The Gondoliers' after Easter. On October 19 and 20, the Teignmouth Juvenile Amateur Operatic Society (60 performers) gave performances of 'Princess Ju-Ju,' conducted by Mr. Sydney Knapman. The Isca Glee Singers gave their concert at Axminster on October 19, and sang excellently. In aid of the funds of King's Kerswell Village Band, a concert was organized on October 21 by Mrs. Mortimer. 'St. Paul' was given by band and chorus of 180 performers in Union Street Church, Torquay, on October 26, with Mr. G. W. Coss, conductor, and Mr. W. L. Twinning at the organ. Miss Beatrice Heavyside and Mr. C. T. Heavyside (violinello and pianoforte) gave their third vocal and instrumental recital at Torquay on November 5. On November 12, Mr. W. L. Twinning gave a pupils' concert in Torquay. The Torquay Musical Association, conducted by Mr. T. H. Webb, performed Parry's 'Darkness and Light.'

Operatic performances have been given by the Constantine Choir on November 7 ('Princess Ju-Ju'), conducted by the Misses Seager and Powell; and at Exbourne on November 9, 'Abou Hassan.'

Mr. T. Roylands Smith has been elected to the council of the South-western Section of the Incorporated Society of Musicians for three years, and a sub-delegate to the general council for two years, and re-appointed honorary treasurer.

CORNWALL.

Spohr's 'The last judgment' was performed at Penzance on October 23 by a well-trained choir under Mr. Alex. Comson, with band and organ, the soloists being Miss Maud Tellam, Messrs. S. R. Symons and A. G. Old, with Mr. Walter Barnes leader of the orchestra. Marazion Male-voice Choir sang glees and choruses in Penzance on November 4.

Speaking at Truro on November 4, Sir William Bigge, chairman of the Associated Board of the Royal Academy of Music and the Royal College of Music, said that the entries at Truro had so increased that it had been decided to open a new centre at St. Austell.

DUBLIN.

The Royal Dublin Society chamber music recitals commenced on Monday, November 7, with the Bohemian Quartet, who played Dvůrák in D minor (Op. 34), Brahms in B flat (Op. 67), and Beethoven in E minor (Op. 59, No. 2). This was their second visit to Dublin, and they were much appreciated by a large audience.

On November 14, Mr. Archie Rosenthal gave a pianoforte recital, playing Macdowell's 'Sonata tragica.' A couple of short pieces by himself proved melodious and attractive.

On November 21, Mr. T. Tertius Noble, of York Minster, who acted as adjudicator at the Feis Ceoil Choral Competitions for a couple of years past, gave an organ recital.

On November 17, Dr. Esposito and Mr. Clyde Twelvrees gave a pianoforte and violinello recital. The programme included Brahms's Violoncello and pianoforte sonata in F, and Beethoven's Violoncello and pianoforte sonata in A major, besides solos for each instrument. Miss Norah Sidford accompanied the violinello solos.

Pianoforte recitals were given by Herr Georg Oberhoffer, on October 26, and by Miss Mabel J. Lander on November 9. Both these artists are engaged at the Leinster School of Music.

EDINBURGH.

The first of Messrs. Paterson's present series of orchestral concerts was given in the McEwan Hall on November 14, before a crowded audience. Much interest was manifested in the first appearance of the new conductor, Mr. Emil Mlynarski, who secured fine performances of Tchaikovsky's 'Pathetic' symphony and pieces by Wagner, Liszt and Liadoff. The vocalist was Mr. Van Rooy, who roused great enthusiasm by his singing of compositions by Schubert and Wagner. Mr. Scott Jupp accompanied.

The Edinburgh branch of the Scottish National Song Society held its annual Sangschaw in the Goolf Hall on October 22. Prizes and certificates were awarded in singing, reciting, violin-playing, pianoforte-playing, bagpipe-playing, and dancing competitions. In the evening a concert was given in the Queen's Hall, with a programme sustained by the prize-winners in the various sections, assisted by Miss Mentiplay and Mr. Oldham, and The Harmonists—a male quartet of exceptional excellence.

Following the success of an experimental concert held in the summer, the first of a series of three concerts to be given during the season, specially arranged for young people of school age, took place in the Queen's Hall on November 4. The scheme is under the management of the School Concert Committee of the Edinburgh Musical Education Society, and is part of a movement to develop the musical appreciation of the rising generation by placing before them the best and withal the simplest kind of classical music. The programme on this occasion comprised examples from the works of Handel, Mozart, Schubert, Mendelssohn, Brahms and others. The performers were Miss Margaret Kennedy (vocalist), Miss Chrystal (violinist), and Miss Barrons (pianist). Professor Niecks presided, and prefaced each item with explanatory remarks which added greatly to the interest and educational value of the concert.

A concert in aid of Edinburgh charities was given by the Sunday Society in the King's Theatre on November 13. A number of orchestral pieces were satisfactorily performed by the Edinburgh Symphony Orchestra (conductor, Mr. G. W. Crawford), and songs were contributed by Miss Alice Prowse and Mr. Alfred Young. The accompanist was Mr. George Short.

The first of the four historical concerts which are annually given under the direction of Professor Niecks, took place in the University Music Class Room on November 9. The programme was devoted to an exposition of three String quintets, viz., Mozart's in G minor, Beethoven's in C major, and Brahms's in G major, which were played in a highly finished manner by the Verbruggen String Quintet.

Mr. G. W. Crawford delivered a lecture on November 15, in the Goolf Hall, to the members of the Edinburgh Health League, on 'Music: its influence.' Councillor Stevenson presided, and in introducing the lecturer remarked that the Town Council spent annually £900 in providing music in the public parks, giving over a hundred performances during the season.

In the United Free Church Assembly Hall, on November 15, Mr. Cecil J. Sharp, assisted by Miss Mattie Kay, vocalist, delivered a lecture to the members of the Philosophical Institution on 'English folk-songs and dance airs.'

Among other concerts given during the month have been vocal recitals by Miss Edmund-Edmunds and Miss Harriet Meyjes (accompanist, Miss Barrons); Miss Rose Dunbar, assisted by Mr. Fred Falconer and Mr. George Short; Mrs. George Swinton (accompanist, Mr. Martin Hobkirk); Miss Helen Ford, assisted by Miss Bowick (elocutionist) and Mr. Arthur W. Dace (pianist). Pianoforte recitals by Mr. E. B. Appleyard, also by Mr. Paul Della Torre, assisted by Mr. Alfred Young (vocalist), and a violin recital by Mr. Ernest Kösting, with Mr. A. Forbes Milne at the pianoforte.

GLASGOW.

Thanks to the enterprise of the Glasgow Bach Choir, lovers of music here are being made acquainted with many of the great Cantor's less known compositions. At the chamber concert given under the Choir's auspices, on November 1, interesting performances were given of three concertos, viz., A minor (for solo violin, strings and pianoforte), D minor (for two violins, strings and pianoforte), and D major (for solo pianoforte and strings). Four chorale-preludes (arranged for the pianoforte by the performer) were sympathetically played by Mr. A. M. Henderson. The vocal numbers on the programme comprised six chorales, which, sung by a quartet, lost somewhat in effect, but were nevertheless quite acceptable. Much of the success of the concert was due to the enthusiastic direction of Mr. R. Finnie McEwen.

On November 8, the Misses Florence and Bertha Salter gave a vocal recital, a feature of which was the concert-givers' artistic rendering of some unfamiliar duets. In addition to his duties as accompanist, Mr. A. M. Henderson contributed two groups of pianoforte solos.

The Choral and Orchestral Union's season opened brilliantly on November 15, when Mr. Emil Mlynarski, the newly-appointed conductor, received a hearty welcome from an audience which crowded St. Andrew's Hall. With the exception of two novelties—a Scherzo by Liadoff and Liszt's third 'Hungarian rhapsody'—the programme was on familiar lines, and included the overture to 'Die Meistersinger' and Tchaikovsky's 'Pathetic' symphony. From start to finish it was evident that conductor and band were perfectly en rapport, and the result was a performance of such distinction as augurs well for the artistic success of the season's concerts. The management were fortunate in securing the services of Herr Anton van Rooy as vocalist, and that distinguished artist contributed excerpts from 'Die Meistersinger' and 'Die Walküre,' as well as songs by Schubert and Schumann.

The Scottish Orchestra was again in first-rate form at the first Saturday Popular Orchestral Concert on November 19, when was given a brilliant performance of the overture to Humperdinck's 'Hansel and Gretel,' Tchaikovsky's Suite in D minor for orchestra, and Moniuszko's 'Dance of the Polish mountaineers,' from 'Halka,' the last-named being a novelty. Mrs. Curzon Watt, a very able pianist who has lately settled in the city, gave a delightful reading of Beethoven's fourth Pianoforte concerto, and Mr. Henry Brearley was vocalist.

A first performance of an important choral work is always a notable event, but it is doubly so when the composer acts as conductor. This was the case on November 22, when 'The Kingdom' was given for the first time in Scotland, and was conducted by Sir Edward Elgar himself.

GLOUCESTER AND DISTRICT.

There are everywhere signs of great musical activity throughout the county of Gloucester, all the many societies in the city and district having made their arrangements for the season. Of actual performances there is at present not much to record. The enterprising director of the Cheltenham Philharmonic Society has been at work for some time, and gave his first concert on November 9 at the Town Hall. The works presented were a short cantata by Canon Gardner, of All Saints' Church, Cheltenham, entitled 'The marriage feast.' The work is not entirely new, having been given previously in Canon Gardner's church, but as this was the first performance in a public hall on a larger scale it attracted a good deal of public attention and had a most friendly reception. The composer scored the work for this occasion, it having been written originally for organ accompaniment only. The solos were taken by Miss Mabel Manson, Miss Effie Martyn, Mr. Webster Miller, and Mr. J. Potter. The cantata is one of very great interest, and was well performed, the composer receiving quite an ovation at the close. The remainder of the programme was taken up with a creditable performance of 'Cavalleria Rusticana,' with the soloists mentioned above. For the second concert of the season, Flotow's 'Martha' is announced.

When the Shire Hall at Gloucester was reconstructed previous to the festival of the Three Choirs in September, through the generosity of Sir Hubert Parry, with a view to making it one of the best concert rooms in the provinces, an appeal was made for a new organ to replace the instrument that had done duty for the past sixty years. Dr. A. Herbert Brewer, organist of Gloucester Cathedral, threw himself with great energy into the matter, and the response from City and County was so prompt and generous that the new organ was built and ready for use at the festival. A small sum, however, still remained to be collected, and with the double view of providing an opportunity for the public to hear the new organ and to wipe off the deficit, Dr. Brewer arranged a series of recitals. Three of these have been given, and proved so successful that the sum remaining for the organ fund was obtained. The Shire Hall was filled on each occasion with large and appreciative audiences, at popular prices of a shilling, sixpence, and threepence, and there is no doubt that the recitals will be continued. The free recitals of sacred music, which are given fortnightly in the Cathedral during the winter, and which attract a gathering of about two thousand persons at each performance, are resumed this month.

The Bristol Royal Orpheus Society, under the direction of Mr. George Riseley, visited Gloucester on November 3, in aid of the local benevolent fund of the Gloucester District Commercial Travellers' Association, drawing a very large audience to the Shire Hall. The members of the Orpheus, to the number of over sixty, sang splendidly throughout, and in response to a vote of thanks, Mr. Riseley, referring to the younger Society founded on the same lines in Gloucester City, made an interesting suggestion. He hoped the Gloucester Orpheonists would visit Bristol, and that the Bristol men would come again to Gloucester, and if the two Societies could join together on some occasion nothing would, he said, give them greater pleasure than to sing under the batons of Dr. Brewer and Mr. Lee Williams.

The Gloucester Orpheus Society is busily at work for its annual concert next February; and on October 28 the members, under Dr. Brewer, went to Stroud to help the funds of the local hospital. The visit was much appreciated.

Cheltenham is well provided with musical entertainment. On October 18, Mlle. Verlet and Mr. Mark Hambourg visited the town. On November 8 a grand concert was given by Kubelik and Backhaus; and on November 19 Pachmann, as usual, delighted a large audience of enthusiastic admirers.

LIVERPOOL AND DISTRICT.

The past month has been one of almost unexampled musical activity hereabouts. Concerts of all descriptions, choral and instrumental; oratorios; cantatas; operas, both heavy and light; lectures and recitals, have been offered to the public in bewildering profusion. One event which stands out prominently by reason of the noble numbers of its programme, and their magnificent performance, is the concert given by the Hallé Orchestra, conducted by Dr. Richter, on November 12. The hold that Wagner's music retains was shown by the absorption of the large audience in the liberal selection provided (including the concert arrangement of 'Nibelungen' themes). Beethoven's 'Eroica' symphony was no less appreciated.

The performance of Dvůřák's dramatic cantata 'The spectre's bride,' by the Philharmonic Society, on November 8, chiefly emphasised the picturesque descriptive accompaniments. The solo and choral features were commensurate in lesser degree. The vocal principals were Madame de Vere Sapio, Mr. Lloyd Chandos, and Mr. Herbert Brown. Dr. F. H. Cowen conducted. The main interest of the evening centred in Mr. Hamilton Harty's clever work, 'With the wild geese,' and the composer, who was present, received a flattering call.

The Finnish prima-donna, Madame Aino Ackté, made a successful first appearance here at the second Philharmonic concert, on October 25. M. Pablo Casals gave convincing proofs of his executive skill and musicianly art as a violoncellist; and the choir sang a part-song by Brahms, 'The falcon.'

A commendable performance of Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius,' remarkable for its artistic restraint rather than its exaltation, was given on November 2 by the Catholic Philharmonic Society, under the direction of Mr. H. P. Allen. The soloists were Miss Clare Hamilton, Mr. Gervase Elwes, and Mr. Ivor Foster. A word of appreciation is due to the excellent singing of the male choir in the responses 'Media Vita' (Cantor, Rev. W. Foy), and in two other examples of ancient church music, 'De Profundis' and the liturgical hymn 'Languentibus in Purgatorio.'

Local connoisseurs were highly pleased with the excellence of the performances given by the Thomas Beecham Opera Company of Offenbach's 'Tales of Hoffmann,' and Johann Strauss's 'Fledermaus,' in the Royal Court Theatre. Both operas were exceedingly well rendered, vocally and instrumentally, under the direction of Mr. Hamish MacCunn and Mr. Howard Carr. Another successful event worthy of note was the production of Goldmark's opera, 'The Queen of Sheba,' by the Carl Rosa Opera Company, during their week's visit to the Shakespeare Theatre.

Mr. Filson Young, continuing his course of lectures in connection with the Music Lectures Association, on November 11, took as the subject of his third discourse, 'The musician as interpreter.' He said that human interpretation of music was distributed among three principal groups of performers: the singer, the player of the instrument, and the conductor. The art of conducting was the most complex of these methods of interpretation. There was such a thing as technique in conducting, which was an entirely modern art, dating no further back than Wagner, who might indeed be said to be the inventor of it. It was Wagner who had sent out into the world that band of apostles, the greatest of whom were Von Bulow, Richter, Mottl and Nikisch, who devoted their lives entirely to this one art.

The programme of the 151st concert of the Societa Armonica, on October 29, was devoted chiefly to Russian composers, who were represented by Kalinnikoff's Symphony No. 2, in A, and Rachmaninoff's Pianoforte concerto No. 2, in C minor—the latter very cleverly played by a young Liverpool pianist, Mr. Douglas Miller, a pupil of Godowsky. Madame Henriette Engelhard, a Liverpool amateur, made a distinctly favourable impression by her artistic singing.

At the recent distribution of awards at the Liverpool College of Music, of which Dr. F. H. Cowen is hon. president, the annual report was read by Mr. H. E. Hunt. In commenting on its favourable features and on the excellent work done by the College students, Mr. J. G. Legge, the City Director of Education, emphasised the desirability of a more suitable building and the provision of scholarships. It is hoped that public interest will be aroused by Mr. Legge's timely speech. It is rather a reflection on this great centre that clever students of the College have to go elsewhere to take up scholarships worth having.

At the third of the Akeroyd Symphony concerts, on November 15, Miss Marjorie Hayward (violinist) was favourably heard in Bruch's Concerto in D minor, and Mr. Fraser Gange (baritone) sang well in interesting settings by C. A. Lidgey, of three poems by W. E. Henley.

The tenth annual festival of the Liverpool Church Choir Association took place in St. George's Hall, on November 17, in the presence of a crowded assembly, which included the Lord Bishop (Dr. Chavasse), the Lord Mayor of Liverpool, the Mayor of Birkenhead, and many representative citizens. A choir of some 500 men and boys, with a sprinkling of ladies, drawn from eighteen choirs, formed the chorus, which was supported by Dr. A. L. Peace at the organ, and by two trumpets, two trombones, and drums. The music-book, published by Messrs. Novello, contained seven choral items: Stainer's anthem, 'Awake, awake,' Sullivan's chorus, 'There is joy' ('Prodigal Son'), T. Tertius Noble's Te Deum in B minor, and unaccompanied anthem, 'Fierce was the wild billow,' Handel's 'For unto us,' Sir C. V. Stanford's 'Bible-song' chorus, 'A song of freedom,' and Mr. E. Watson's new anthem, 'Lift up your heads,' which had been selected by Sir G. C. Martin from the compositions by local composers, sent in anonymously to the committee at their invitation. This is the second time that Mr. Watson's music has been chosen by this method. Mr. T. Tertius Noble, who conducted a fine performance of his stately Te Deum in B minor and thrilling anthem, 'Fierce was the wild billow,' which was exceedingly well sung, had a cordial reception; he was twice recalled after his solo on the great organ, De la Tombelle's 'Marche Pontificale.' The vocal soloists were Master Stanley Whinyles and Messrs. Gawthrop and Sutton Shepley, of the Chapel Royal, St. James's, choir, of whom the boy was especially successful in his solos. Generally speaking, the choral singing was of excellent quality, and alert and responsive. It reflected credit on the various choirmasters and choirs, and on the Association, whose work has wide-reaching influence.

The Welsh Choral Union added to their list of notable achievements by their performance of Berlioz's 'Faust,' in the Philharmonic Hall on November 19. Excellent vocal principals were engaged in Miss Emily Breare, Mr. Lloyd Chandos, Mr. Charles Tree and Mr. Gregory Evans. Chorally, and especially instrumentally, the performance reflected infinite credit on the forces, and upon Mr. Harry Evans, who conducted. It is announced that Sir Edward Elgar's new Violin concerto will be played by Mr. Zacharewitsch at the third concert on January 21.

In the Birkenhead Town Hall, on November 18, the Rawdon Briggs Quartet gave a successful concert, being associated with Miss Ella Leyland in Brahms's Pianoforte quintet. Mr. Plunket Greene was the vocalist.

MANCHESTER AND DISTRICT.

On the morning following the first Hallé concert, Manchester's leading paper contained a letter from a 'Subscriber': 'Are vitality and initiative forsaking the Hallé Concerts Society? At the first concert there were three orchestral pieces: one has already been played three times, one twenty-five times, and one over thirty times . . . it will be pitiful if the Society drops into a groove of repetition and loses its reputation for musical ardour.'

From advertisements which have appeared recently in the local papers, the new Manchester Musical Society in course of formation may do something to focus the prevalent discontent with the ultra-conservative artistic policy of the executive. If that body could only be inoculated with a tinge of the progressive tendencies animating the City Art Gallery management, not Manchester alone but Lancashire and the North would have cause for great rejoicing.

Señor Pablo Casals redeemed what would otherwise have been a somewhat uneventful concert. When moderns of the stamp of Casals, Ysaïe and Kreisler (all of whom have played here recently) approach the early romantic composers, they pour such floods of emotional intensity into their concertos that the stately dignity and classic grace of notable executants of a past generation seem cold and statuesque by comparison with these more ardent readings; but probably the average listener would prefer these latter-day performances, pulsating with such vital energy.

Unable to give us the Elgar concerto, Kreisler played what was probably the best substitute, the concerto of Brahms, and the violinist's own Cadenza proved to be quite a remarkable excursus in the real Brahmsian spirit. The expected performance of Strauss's 'Macbeth' poem for this concert, November 3, had to be postponed, presumably owing to the need of further rehearsal.

Mr. Edward Isaac's appearance as performer-composer at the second concert, October 27, excited considerable interest, as he is Manchester born, bred, and trained, one of the first-fruits of the Manchester Royal College of Music.

His Pianoforte concerto in C sharp minor was played in September, 1906, under Mr. Speelman, at the Blackpool North Pier concerts; and also at the 1909 season of London Promenades, under Mr. Henry J. Wood. Since then, I am not aware of any other performance until this, under Dr. Richter. With the best will and kindest feelings possible towards this composer, one feels obliged to ask 'Was the Hallé concert the right and proper place for this work?' Still, the occasion was noteworthy in that, at any rate under the Richter régime, no other Manchester musician has had a work of such dimensions performed by this Society.

Of the Schumann Centenary Celebration concert, on November 10, it is not possible to write with much enthusiasm, Mr. Harold Bauer's playing alone excepted. His appearances in Manchester have been very few indeed, and he is a difficult man to place, but his playing in the Schumann concerto and the 'Kreisleriana' proved stimulating rather than completely satisfying, and left one with a strong desire to hear him in something of a larger and bolder design. The 'Nachtlied,' for chorus and orchestra, had been indifferently prepared and was performed in a very listless fashion. The fifth concert, on November 17, brought Mlle. Alice Verlet for the first time to these concerts, but her appearance was only a qualified success: Hallé audiences do not take a keen interest in vocal pyrotechnics. Dr. Richter played Brahms's first Symphony with much greater warmth than in any previous performance, the work of the brass wind players being of surpassing beauty.

Mr. Speelman's promenade smoking concerts are providing a happy combination of music, both serious and gay, and certainly fill a niche in the city's musical life. So far, Madame Annie Walker, Miss Lucy Nuttall and Mr. Webster Millar have been the vocalists. Messrs. Maaskoff, R. J. Forbes, and V. L. Needham, the solo instrumentalists—all of them the product of Manchester's musical training establishments.

Whatever may be the cause, a marked increase of interest in the Gentlemen's Concerts this season is to be noted. The programme of the opening of the orchestral concert contained many items of the lighter order, along with Beethoven's first Symphony; Miss Ada Forrest sang new settings by Mr. Eric Coates of three Shakespearian songs not previously heard here. To the second concert came Vsaye and Pugno, and great things were heard in the César Franck and 'Kreutzer' sonatas. At the third concert, Mr. H. J. Wood brought the ballet music from Massenet's 'Le Cid' to its first performance here, and Mr. Willy Hess, formerly leader of the Hallé Orchestra, played the Mendelssohn Concerto, the same composer's 'Italian Symphony' heading the programme.

It may safely be said that during the past month the numerous concerts of chamber music have conferred the greater distinction on Manchester. The first Brodsky Quartet provided the best balanced performance of Tchaikovsky's great 'In Memoriam' trio heard here for many years, Miss Johanna Stockmarr joining Messrs. Brodsky and Fuchs.

Mr. T. W. Surette's lectures are proving most illuminating, and Mr. Petri's Ancoats recitals of the Beethoven sonatas continue to draw large and discriminating audiences.

At the Bowdon chamber concerts, Mr. Casals and Mr. Campbell McInnes gave a superb programme of ancient and modern music, Alfred Bruneau's setting of Catulle Mendès's 'L'heureux vagabond,' sung by Mr. McInnes, being exceptionally beautiful.

The opening Schiller-Anstalt concert brought the famous Bohemian Quartet, with a new viola player since their last visit five or six years ago. They plunged us straight away into the most advanced and recent Max Reger composition, the E flat Quartet, and, as Manchester's knowledge of this composer is limited to the Variations for two pianofortes, a few of his lieder and alla cappella choral songs, and a solitary orchestral work (which was played two years ago by Mr. Beecham to a mere handful of listeners), it is not surprising that even such a cultured audience as that foregathering at the Schiller-Anstalt should find itself out of its depth. The D minor Quartet, by their compatriot Dvůrák, these Bohemians played as they only can.

The second Brodsky Quartet concert, on November 16, brought to Mr. Edward Isaacs's new Sonata in A major, for violin and pianoforte, that wider publicity advocated in these columns last August, after the performance at the students' reunion at the Royal College of Music here. On this later occasion Dr. Brodsky joined the composer.

In association with the Brodsky Quartet, Miss Jean Nesbitt, who hails from Toronto, gave a concert on November 15, and played very finely in Schumann's Quintet, in addition to a series of Chopin pieces.

The Carl Rosa Opera Company, under the conductorship of Mr. Eugene Goossens, have been playing at the Theatre Royal for a fortnight, reviving Goldmark's 'Queen of Sheba,' which they produced here for the first time in England in the earlier part of the year.

Mr. Brand Lane's Philharmonic Choir have performed 'Elijah,' and a thoroughly interesting performance of 'Gerontius' was given on November 4, by the Catholic Philharmonic Society, formed by the union of contingents of chorists belonging to Manchester and Liverpool, under the conductorship of Mr. H. P. Allen, organist of the Catholic Cathedral in Salford (and not to be confused with Dr. H. P. Allen, of Oxford). At previous concerts by this Society in Manchester the public patronage has been in inverse ratio to the character and quality of the performances, but on this occasion the Free Trade Hall was crowded to excess. Miss Clare Hamilton was new to us here in this music, but it will be strange if we do not hear more of her in Manchester. Mr. Gervase Elwes and Mr. Ivor Foster were the other soloists.

An interesting presentation has been made during the month to Mr. R. H. Wilson, the Hallé chorus-master, on the completion of twenty-one years' service in this capacity. One of the oldest members of the Hallé Choir, Mr. G. Kenyon, made the presentation in the name of past and present members of the Choir, at one of the rehearsals, making felicitous allusion to Mr. Wilson's association with the Choir under the late Sir Charles Hallé, and the various conductors who filled the interval until Dr. Richter's appointment.

It appears that Mr. Ernest Denhof's scheme for the 'Ring' dramas has received more support in Manchester than in any other English centre, but at the time of writing the sum of £2,500 only has been promised in tickets or guarantee fund, whereas £3,000 must be forthcoming before the production can be assured. The production of Strauss's 'Elektra' has been definitely abandoned.

The Manchester Musical Society, to which reference is made at the commencement of this article, has been formed with the following objects in view: (1.) To establish a point of concentration for the musical enthusiasts of both sexes in Manchester; (2.) To arrange fortnightly meetings, when private concerts will be given, consisting of music not easily obtainable elsewhere; (3.) To arrange papers on subjects of interest to members of the Society; (4.) To create a means of intercourse whereby it is hoped that the opinions of Manchester amateurs of music may be voiced more effectively than is at present possible, in view of the want of organization that exists. The hon. sec. is Mr. J. Kahane. The opening meeting was devoted to Schumann; arrangements have been made for papers by two Manchester musical critics, Mr. S. Longford (speaking on 'Hugo Wolf,' and Mr. Gerald Cumberland on 'Bantock's songs,' and the Rawdon Briggs Quartet are to play new chamber music by Sibelius, Sinigaglia, and Ernest Walker. At the time of going to Press the membership approaches 200.

NEWCASTLE AND DISTRICT.

Owing to lack of support, the 'Ring' and 'Elektra' performances will unfortunately not take place. Newcastle holds a rather unenviable reputation in matters operatic, but the scheme would probably have been successful if a strong committee had been formed, and a centre of influence and interest had thus been created. The visit of the splendid light opera company of Mr. Beecham, from November 14 to 19, caused much interest. Two quickly successive concerts of the Chamber Music Society were of exceptional importance. At the first, on October 24, a stirring recital was given by Vsaye and Pugno. At the second, on November 4, the Flonzaley Quartet made their first appearance here, and proved a very fine combination. The third local performance of Debussy's wonderfully beautiful Quartet roused the audience to enthusiasm. Mr. Thornley Gibson, a native of the district, who has been studying in Berlin, sang with exceptional insight and strong emotional power, songs by Dowland, Schubert and Wolf. His finely-trained baritone voice and his sensitive temperament ought to carry him far.

The Elswick Road Wesleyan Choir recently gave capital performances of Cowen's 'Ruth' and Mendelssohn's 'Athalia,' under the baton of Mr. George Dodds. The Darlington Orchestral and Choral Society announce two concerts, at which 'The Messiah,' Elgar's 'Black Knight,' Mendelssohn's 'Loreley,' and 'Midsummer night's Dream' music will be given, under the direction of Mr. T. W. Henderson.

NOTTINGHAM AND DISTRICT.

One of the most educational outlets of music is found at the lectures held in the University College. The first of these was held at the College on October 13, when Dr. T. Lea Southgate dealt with the subject of 'The evolution of the pianoforte,' tracing its origin from the dulcimer, clavicord, spinet and harpsichord. He was ably assisted by Miss Nellie Chaplin and Mr. John Saville (vocalist) in a programme of great interest. The second of the series took place on October 20, when Miss Cantelo gave a recital illustrating the subject of 'Pianoforte music from Bach to Chopin,' and a most interesting selection was admirably performed with very interesting and valuable remarks from her pen, read by Professor Heaton.

The subscription concerts were commenced on October 19, by an orchestral concert given under the direction of Dr. Richter, when the Hallé Orchestra gave works by Beethoven, Wagner and Debussy, and the Arensky Pianoforte concerto was executed by Edward Gold. At the second of this series, on November 9, Madame Kirkby Lunn, Miss Louise Dale and Mr. Theo. Byard (vocalists), Mr. Leonard Borwick (pianoforte), Dr. Barjansky (violinello), and Mr. Murdoch (accompanist) took part.

On November 10 the Nottingham Sacred Harmonic Society gave its first choral concert. The work was Elgar's 'Caractacus,' which won a decided place for itself some two years ago, when performed first in this city. This time, however, the performance seemed lacking in brilliancy—alike in orchestra and choir there was a feeling of unsteadiness, which was only overcome towards the end of the work. The solos were undertaken by Miss Esta d'Argo, Mr. Webster Millar, Mr. Reginald Gould and Mr. Peter Dawson. Mr. Allen Gill conducted his forces through a difficult work with energy, and Mr. F. Wyatt ably supplied the work required at the organ.

Since I last wrote, Nottingham has been presented by Sir Jesse Boot with a city organ, placed in the Albert Hall, and every week organ recitals are given by the organist, Mr. Bernard Johnson, the proceeds going to the General Hospital. It is gratifying to be able to add that in the three weeks, since the opening by Mr. C. W. Perkins, of Birmingham, on October 22, nearly £150 was paid over to the institution. Besides the organ recitals, concerts are given every Saturday evening at popular prices, and the public seem to appreciate this attempt to give them an opportunity to hear the best talent.

M. de Fachmann paid a flying visit on November 2 to the city, and played before an appreciative audience.

SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

A second series of orchestral promenade concerts was inaugurated on November 3, when the announcement of a Wagner programme attracted a large audience. The selections included the overture and prelude to Act III. of 'Die Meistersinger,' 'Siegfried's journey to the Rhine' ('Götterdämmerung'), 'Entrance of the Gods' ('Das Rheingold'), 'Good Friday music' ('Parsifal'), 'Ride of the Valkyries,' overture to 'Rienzi,' and some pieces from 'Lohengrin.' Dvůřák's 'Carneval' overture and Saint-Saëns's 'Le Rouet d'Omphale' were also played by the enthusiastic orchestra, mainly local, numbering some sixty or more players. Mr. William Foxon sang songs by Wagner and Beethoven, and Mr. J. A. Rodgers conducted. The prospects of the venture are very encouraging.

An interesting pianoforte recital by half-a-dozen pupils of Mr. Claude Crossley was notable for the inclusion of Bach's Triple and Quadruple concerti in A and D minor for pianofortes and strings. These rarely-heard works were admirably played by the small pianists, all of them in their early teens. The youthful recitalists were Marjorie Firth, Winifred Rowbotham, Irene Goodwin, Dorice Parkin, Kathleen Waterhouse and Gerard Ball. Mr. J. A. Rodgers conducted a small string orchestra, with Mr. John Peck as principal.

The polished ensemble and refined tonal beauties of the Klingler Quartet were revealed on the occasion of their visit to the Sheffield Chamber Music Society on February 15. They played Beethoven's Op. 130, giving a well-proportioned performance of the intricate work. They excelled however in Brahms's Op. 67, which was played in ideal style, warm and yet not overloaded with emotion. Another interesting concert of the month was a violin and pianoforte recital given in the Albert Hall, by Messrs. Ysaye and Pugno.

At the second of Messrs. Wilson, Peck & Co.'s Subscription Concerts, Madame Kirkby Lunn, Miss Amy Evans, Mr. Theodore Byard, Mr. Leonard Borwick and Dr. Serge Barjansky were the performers.

PERFORMANCE OF 'THE SUN-GOD'S RETURN.'

For the first Subscription Concert of the Sheffield Musical Union, given on November 17, an interesting novelty had been secured in Sir A. C. Mackenzie's cantata 'The Sun-god's return,' which was recently produced at the Cardiff festival. The composer conducted a performance which, on its orchestral and choral sides, was forceful and at times brilliant. The conquering of the many difficulties of the score taxed the forces to the utmost. The Musical Union, it is understood, is shortly to sing the work in London under the direction of the composer. The soloists were Madame De Vere Sapio, Miss Alice Heeley and Mr. Albert Watson. At the same concert Dr. Coward conducted a polished and beautifully-refined performance of Sir E. Elgar's picturesque suite 'From the Bavarian Highlands.' A dashing performance of Sir A. C. Mackenzie's breezy 'Britannia' overture, conducted by the composer, concluded the concert.

LEEDS.

Since the excitement of the festival subsided there has not been much doing in a musical way at Leeds, and the chief event of the month, the Philharmonic concert of November 23, falls too late for criticism in the present issue. The Municipal Orchestral Concerts began their eighth series on October 29, when the excellent performance, under Mr. Fricker's direction, of a good all-round programme, augured well for the artistic success of the season. Liszt's symphonic poem 'Les Préludes' was the most important work given, and in Beethoven's 'Prometheus' and 'Coriolan' overtures we had an earnest of the fulfilment of a promise to give all Beethoven's principal overtures (together with those of Wagner) during the season. An agreeable air of playfulness was given to the concert by the inclusion of two very popular modern suites, Tchaikovsky's 'Casse Noisette' and Elgar's second 'Wand of youth'; and of particular interest was Weingartner's brilliant arrangement of Weber's 'Invitation to the dance.' Mrs. Herbert Hutchinson was the vocalist, and sang artistically. Two of the principal series of chamber concerts—of which we are to have a greater number than usual this season—have begun. On October 26 the Leeds Bohemian concert included String quartets by Haydn (in F, Op. 77, No. 2), Beethoven (in A, Op. 18, No. 5), and Schumann (in A, Op. 41, No. 3); and on November 2 the Rasch Quartet Party gave a String quartet by the Russian composer, Gliere, and, with the assistance of Miss Alice Simpkin and her lady colleagues, Spohr's double Quartet in E minor (Op. 87). The Leeds Musical Evenings, which are now given up chiefly to recitals by eminent virtuos, were resumed on October 25, when Mr. Mark Hambourg played in brilliant style, and with perhaps more than usual sympathy, a highly interesting programme of works by Schumann and Chopin, of which Schumann's poetic Fantasia (Op. 17) was the most striking feature, though in the Chopin selection the pianist seemed more at home. On November 15, Mr. Pachmann came, and gave in characteristic fashion a programme one half of which was devoted to Chopin. His personality, no less than his playing, attracted a very large audience, and his performances, in spite of the distractions of his spoken comments, were of remarkable delicacy and charm.

On November 8, Mr. Herbert Johnson, a young pianist of very exceptional gifts, gave striking proof of his powers in a recital, the programme of which ranged over a great variety of music. In the way of original pianoforte music we had Schumann's second Sonata, Toccata, and Romance in F sharp, Mendelssohn's E minor Prelude and Fugue, a series of eight Chopin preludes, and several pieces of the modern Russian school, while in the way of transcriptions were Liszt's transcription of Bach's great G minor Fugue, some Beethoven-Seiss German dances, and other arrangements by Brahms and Tausig. It was a very exacting programme, which was played with remarkable freedom and power. On November 21, Mr. Beecham's light opera company visited Leeds, and, under the direction of Mr. Hamish MacCunn, produced Offenbach's 'Contes d'Hoffmann' and Johann Strauss's 'Fledermaus' in artistic style.

BRADFORD.

The Bradford season opened on October 18 with a performance of the 'Golden Legend' by the Old Choral Society, under Mr. Pickles, and with Miss Emily Breare, Miss Bradley, Messrs. Harold Wilde and Thorpe Bates as soloists. The choral singing was of a generally satisfactory character. On the same date Miss Marion Webster, a young violinist, gave a recital and played some familiar pieces, such as Bruch's G minor Concerto, in finished style. On October 21 the Subscription series, which are this year to be extended to eight—not all, however, of uniform quality—opened with a pianoforte recital by Mr. Wilhelm Backhaus, and at the second concert, on November 4, an exceptionally interesting programme was afforded by Dr. Richter and the Hallé Orchestra, including the Brahms Violin concerto, with Mr. Kreisler as soloist, and the 'Eroica' symphony, of which fine interpretations were given. On November 18 the programme was of a more miscellaneous character, ranging from violin solos by Mr. Catterall, the very accomplished young Manchester artist, to male-voice glees by the Habersham Vocal Union, whose prowess is well-known in the field of choral competitions. On November 1, Miss Carrie Birkbeck, a soprano with a very cultivated style, and Mr. Herbert Johnson, to whose pianoforte playing reference has already been made, gave a concert, and on November 9 the Bradford Arts Club, which has recently developed a strong musical section, gave the first of some chamber concerts, the Rawdon Briggs Quartet playing Beethoven's third Rasseumovsky Quartet, Schumann's second Quartet (in A), and a charming Fantasia by Dr. Ernest Walker, in highly artistic style. On November 19 the Bradford Permanent Orchestra, under Mr. Allen Gill, began its nineteenth season with a programme that included Beethoven's eighth symphony and overtures by Schumann ('Geneveva'), Mozart and Ambroise Thomas. Miss Gertrude Lonsdale and Mr. William Lovell were the vocalists.

OTHER TOWNS.

On November 10 the Halifax Orchestral Society, an amateur organization conducted by Mr. H. Van Dyk, gave an interesting concert at which creditable performances were given of Beethoven's fourth Symphony, the 'Meistersinger' overture, and some lighter pieces, such as a selection from Cowen's 'Language of flowers' and the characteristic 'Valse triste' of Sibelius. Mr. Horace Binks was the vocalist. At the Huddersfield subscription concert on October 25, Kubelik was the chief attraction, while that on November 15 was a 'Clara Butt' concert, but minus the heroine, for whom an artistic substitute was found in Madame Donalda. The Huddersfield Choral Society's performance of Parry's 'King Saul', on October 28, is dealt with elsewhere, but may be mentioned here for the sake of completing the chronicle.

The Wakefield Chamber Concerts, which attain their majority this season, opened on October 27 with a pianoforte recital by Miss Gertrude Peppercorn, whose powerful, masterly playing would have been heard to greater advantage in a more generally interesting programme. Mr. Thomas Fussell's playing of the late W. Y. Hurlstone's charming 'English sketches' for violin was an agreeable feature of the concert. At Harrogate, on October 29, a choral concert was given in the Kursaal, with the aid of the Leeds Philharmonic Society, and three of Mrs. Meredith's compositions were introduced: her 'Sursum Corda,' and her settings of Owen Seaman's poems, 'Requiem on the death of Queen Victoria' and 'The passing of King Edward the Seventh,' works which show a high aim and a musical feeling to which the composer's technical means hardly suffice, as yet, to give complete expression. The soloists were the Hon. Mrs. Clifford, Miss Oppenshaw, and Mr. Brearley, while in a spirited performance of Brahms's great 'Triumphlied' Mr. Marsden Williams took the baritone solo. A generally successful concert and entertainment season at Harrogate ended on the following Saturday (November 5) with the benefit concerts to Mr. Julian Clifford, who as conductor of the Symphony concerts has raised the efficiency of the orchestra to a very high pitch.

As one of the 'side-shows' to the Missionary Exhibition in York, an interesting experiment was made on October 26 by the performance, with action and scenic effects, of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Death of Minnehaha,' the idea being to illustrate the dawn of Christianity in North America, for which purpose an additional tableau was given of the preaching of John Eliot, 'the Apostle of the Indians.' The cantata was enacted on the stage, partly in expressive pantomime, but with such passages as are given to the principal characters sung by them. The choir, and an orchestra of strings, organ and drums, were arranged on a raised platform in front of the stage, under the conductorship of Mr. T. Tertius Noble, and the effect, aided by appropriate scenery and carefully arranged lighting, was really impressive. The soloists were Miss Grace Groves (Minnehaha), Miss Dacre (Fever), Miss Savage (Nokomis), Mr. Bean (Hiawatha) and Mr. Grantham (Famine), an impersonal solo being sung by Miss Birch. The Hull Harmonic Society, under Mr. Walter Porter, gave a performance of 'Elijah' on November 4, the principals being Miss Norah Newport, Miss Joan Ashley, Mr. J. A. Hinde and Mr. Robert Charlesworth.

Foreign Notes.

The faculty of medicine at the Berlin University has recently conferred honorary doctor's degrees on Max Reger, Engelbert Humperdinck, and Madame Cosima Wagner.

Dr. Richard Strauss was recently able to celebrate the twenty-fifth anniversary of his debut as an orchestral composer, for it was on October 21, 1885, that Hans von Bülow produced his F minor Symphony with the Court Orchestra at Meiningen.

The well-known and much transcribed Organ concerto in D minor, generally attributed to Friedemann Bach, has been proved by Dr. L. Schittler, of Munich, to be but a transcription of a Violin concerto by Vivaldi.

BARMEN.

Under the auspices of the Barmer Lehrergesangverein, three concerts, given on October 14-16, were devoted to works by living German composers, all old students of the Berlin Königliche Hochschule für Musik. Among the most interesting works performed were Friedrich E. Koch's 'Festkantate,' ballade for baritone and orchestra, 'Der Mönch,' by Wilhelm Berger, a Pianoforte concerto by Stavenhagen, and Fritz Kauffmann's second Violin concerto (soloist, Professor Felix Berber).

BASEL.

Owing to the presence of Signor Busoni, who in September conducted a 'Meisterkursus' for pianists at the Conservatoire, the season started very early, and in a promising manner. In connection with his course, Signor Busoni gave four interesting piano pianoforte recitals, the programmes including Beethoven's 'Hammerclaviersonate,' and the 'Paganini variations' by Brahms. In addition to this, an orchestral concert was given, in which Signor Busoni took part as pianist, and conducted his own Pianoforte concerto (with chorus), Op. 39, with Herr Egon Petri as soloist.

BERLIN.

The programme of the second symphony concert of the Königliche Kapelle (conductor, Dr. Richard Strauss) contained Beethoven's Pastoral symphony, Saint-Saëns's second Symphony in A minor, and the conductor's 'Ein Heldenleben.' At the third concert, given on October 31, Dr. Strauss secured fine interpretations of Berlioz's overture 'Carneval Romain,' his own 'Till Eulenspiegel,' and Debussy's three interesting orchestral nocturnes, 'Nuages,' 'Fêtes,' and 'Sirenes.'—At the second Philharmonic concert, on October 24, conducted by Herr Nikisch, the production of Friedrich Gernsheim's tone-poem 'Zu einem Drama' was a success. Another, perhaps more important, novelty for Berlin, viz., Hugo Kaun's second Symphony in C minor, was played at the following concert on November 7. On the same occasion Liadoff's effective orchestral tone-poem 'Kikimora' was heard for the first time.—At the first concert of the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde (conductor, Herr Oscar Fried), on October 17, Charpentier's suite for orchestra, 'Impressions d'Italie,' was heard with great interest. The programme of the second concert on October 31 contained a symphonic poem, 'Pelles und Melisande,' by the ultra-modern Viennese composer, Arnold Schönberg. Though the reception of the work was mixed (his works have up till now generally been mercilessly hissed), almost all the critics admit that the composer possesses a deep and highly original mind and a genuine talent which brings something absolutely new, and whose future productions may be looked forward to with keen expectation.—An excellent performance of Bruckner's fifth Symphony in B flat major, by the Blüthner Orchestra, under Herr Joseph Stransky, formed the pièce de résistance at the first concert of the newly-founded Berliner Konzertverein, on October 20.—The Philharmonic Choir (conductor, Professor Siegfried Ochs) inaugurated its season with a perfect performance of Beethoven's 'Missa solennis.'—The Singakademie (conductor, Professor Georg Schumann) commenced this year's activity on October 21 with a magnificent performance of 'Israel in Egypt.'—A Cassazione in B flat, for wind instruments, by Haydn (played from the manuscript belonging to the Königliche Bibliothek), was recently performed at the first concert of the Kammermusik Vereinigung der Königlichen Kapelle. Interesting pianoforte concertos, by Hans Huber and Liapounoff, figured in the programmes brought forward by Herr Rudolf Ganz and Madame Wera Scriabina. The latter also played a concerto by her husband, Alexander Scriabine. Sinding's new Violin sonata (Op. 99) was recently introduced by Herr Petschnikoff and Frau Jona-Stockhausen. Debussy's String quartet (Op. 10) was played by the Flonzaley Quartet; and the Brussels Quartet introduced a new Quartet by Maurice Ravel.—William Y. Hurlstone's Fantasia-Quartet was recently performed by the Klingler Quartet for the first time in Berlin.—The Königlicher Domchor, (conductor, Professor Hugo Rüdel) submitted at their first concert an interesting programme that included Palestrina's 'Stabat Mater' in Richard Wagner's edition, 'Adoramus te,' by Corsi, and Caldara's sixteen-part 'Crucifixus.'—At the Royal Opera, Signor Caruso has appeared thrice with unprecedented success. The climax was reached with his wonderful impersonation of Nemorino in Donizetti's 'Elisir d'Amore.' It seems that Caruso is nowhere admired, or adored, more than in Germany.

BRUSSELS.

The opera 'Ivan the terrible,' by Raoul Gunsbourg, was recently produced with success at the Théâtre Royale de la Monnaie. The composer, who is director of the Monte Carlo Opera, has had his work scored by M. Léon Jehin, his leading conductor.

CASSEL.

Gabriel Pierné's choral work, 'The children's Crusade,' made a considerable impression when it was recently performed by the Philharmonischer Chor (conductor, Herr Nagel) for the first time in Cassel.

CHEMNITZ.

At the recent concert of the Musikverein, Mozart's entire music to the drama, 'Thamos, König in Ägypten' (composed when he was seventeen years of age), was performed, under the conductorship of Herr E. Winkler.

COLOGNE.

The name of Max Schillings has been much to the fore since the beginning of this season. His opera 'Ingwelde' was given for the first time at the Opera House with much success, and at the first Gürzenich concert, on October 25, the 'Erntefest' from his 'Moloch' was excellently performed, under the direction of Herr Fritz Steinbach. On the same occasion, a new Pianoforte concerto by Julius Weisman was given for the first time, with Herr Karl Feidberg as soloist.

DRESDEN.

Wagner's 'Lohengrin' was recently given for the 400th time at the Royal Opera.—Professor Felix Draeseke, who not long ago celebrated his seventy-fifth birthday, was much honoured at the first Symphony concert of the Königliche Kapelle, when his 'Symphonia tragica' was played under the direction of Herr von Schuch. Shortly afterwards a sacred concert was given, when the greater part of Draeseke's 'Grosse Messe' for full, unaccompanied chorus was performed. The programme also included his six-part 'Salvum fac regem.' The distinction of appearing at the Symphony concerts of the Königliche Kapelle was enjoyed by two English artists, the Misses May and Beatrice Harrison, who played the solo parts of Brahms's double Concerto with great success.

DÜSSELDORF.

Fritz Volbach's little comic-opera 'Die Kunst zu lieben' was recently produced with success at the Municipal Theatre. On the same occasion, Schnitzler's mimic pantomime (Tanz-pantomime) with Dohnányi's original and interesting music, was given for the first time in Düsseldorf.

GÖRLITZ.

The new Musik-Festhalle, erected mainly for the annual Silesian musical festivals, was recently inaugurated with a festival concert, when the instrumentalists were the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra, under the conductorship of Dr. Karl Muck. The occasion was employed for bestowing the Freedom of the City on Count Bolko von Hochberg, the former Intendant of the Berlin Royal Opera, who had greatly furthered the building scheme.

HELSINGFORS.

Under the direction of Herr Georg Schneevoigt, Wagner's 'Siegfried' was recently given for the first time in Finland. The leading parts were played by Herr Hans Tänzler and Madame Ellen Gulbranson. In all, five performances were given.

JESI.

On October 2, a monument of Pergolesi was unveiled in this, his birthplace. In the evening, his 'La serva padrona' and his 'Stabat Mater' were given at the Theatre.

LEIPZIG.

At the first Gewandhaus concert, Professor Nikisch introduced several interesting pieces from Humperdinck's 'Maurische' suite. Schumann's music to Lord Byron's 'Manfred' was given at the second concert, and Liszt's 'Dante symphony' at the third. The following week the production of Wilhelm Berger's orchestral Variations and Fugue, Op. 97, proved genuinely interesting. The leading place in the programme of the fifth concert was occupied by Draeseke's 'Symphonia tragica.'—At the first concert of the Riedel Verein, Dr. Georg Göhler secured an excellent performance of Handel's 'Deborah.'—On November 19, a four-act opera, 'Der Talisman,' by an English composer, Mrs. Adela Maddison, was produced with success at the Neues Theater. The libretto is a close adaptation from Ludwig Fulda's play of the same name. Mrs. Maddison, who was once a pupil of Debussy, has adopted a modern idiom, and has scored her work in an interesting manner.—At the same institution, Halévy's 'Der Blitz,' in many ways an interesting opera, was recently revived. On the same occasion, Dohnányi's pantomime 'Der Schleier der Pierrette' was heard for the first time.

LEMBERG.

A Polish musical festival and a congress on Polish music took place during October 22-28. Chopin's music figured largely in the programme, which contained the E minor Pianoforte concerto, wonderfully played by Herr Moriz Rosenthal. A Chopin recital, given by Mr. Ernest Schelling in place of M. Paderewski, who had not sufficiently recovered from his indisposition, was enthusiastically received. Of the works of contemporary Polish composers, M. Paderewski's Symphony was the most important.

MANNHEIM.

At the Court Theatre the first novelty of the season, viz., Julius Bittner's opera 'Der Musikant,' was recently heard with considerable interest. The composer (who wrote his own libretto) shows much genuine musical invention and artistic feeling.

MOSCOW.

Moussorgsky's posthumous 'musical folk-drama' 'Chwanschtschina,' edited and partly scored by Rimsky-Korsakoff, was produced at the opera in the Solodownikoff Theatre (Director-manager, M. Simin) on the first evening of the season. The work proved one of high originality and great interest, and has now no doubt come to stay.

PARIS.

The Société des Concerts Colonne (conductor, M. Gabriel Pierné) commenced the season's activity as usual with a fine performance of Berlioz's 'Damnation de Faust.'—The Symphony in B flat, by Chausson, and Johan Svendsen's picturesque orchestral episode 'Carnaval à Paris,' were heard with interest at the first Concert Lamoureux, under the baton of M. Chevillard. In memory of the twentieth anniversary of the death of César Franck (on November 9, 1890), three of the master's compositions, viz., the Symphony in D minor, the 'Morceau symphonique (de Rédemption)' and the symphonic poem 'Les Djinns,' for pianoforte and orchestra, were played at the third Colonne Concert. At the last Lamoureux Concert, Lalo's rarely-heard Pianoforte concerto in F minor and Balakirew's second Symphony in D minor were performed.

ST. GALLEN.

Gounod's rarely-heard opera 'Philoné et Baucis' was recently revived at the Municipal Theatre.

ST. PETERSBURG.

At the beginning of the season nearly all the concert societies paid their tribute to the late Mili Balakirew. At the first Siloti Concert, his symphonic poem 'Thamara' (after Lermontoff), on the score of which the composer worked for fifteen years, and his famous pianoforte fantasy 'Islamey' were played. Rimsky-Korsakoff's symphonic poem 'Antar' and Anatole Liadoff's orchestral fairy-tale 'Kikimora' figured in the programme of the first concert of the orchestra of the Imperial Opera.

VENICE.

On October 26 a memorial medallion portrait of Richard Wagner was unveiled at the Palazzo Vendramin, where Wagner died in 1883. The inscription, by Gabriele d'Annunzio, runs as follows: 'In questo Palagio, L'ultimo spiro di Riccardo Wagner, Odoño le anime, Perpetuarsi come la marea, Che lambe i marmi.'

The boys of York Minster Choir School, at the suggestion of the Dean, occupied their recent vacation in the pursuit of various hobbies and submitted the results in competition for prizes. The successful exhibits included some interesting photographs of the Minster, the choir, Mr. G. A. Scaife (choirmaster) and Mr. T. Tertius Noble, taken by C. E. Mennell.

We have received from Rudall, Carte & Co., a copy of their well-arranged and extremely useful 'Professional Pocket Book and Engagement Diary' for 1911. One advantage is the division of the diary into three separate sections, so that one need not be bothered in January with the pages referring to December, and vice versa.

An enterprising and interesting concert was given at Emmanuel College Chapel on November 12, by resident members of the College, under the direction of Dr. E. W. Naylor. A motet for men's voices, by Ernest Ford, and a male-voice trio 'The three Kings,' by Max Bruch, were the choral numbers.

The Music Teachers' Association inaugurated their third season with a meeting at Portman Rooms on November 19. The chair was taken by Mr. E. E. Cooper, Chairman of the Royal Academy of Music. Violin and pianoforte music was played by Mr. Rowsby Wool and Miss Winifred Christie.

At the close of the recent General Council meeting of the Nonconformist Choir Union, the new executive met to select the items to be sung at next year's festival, which has been provisionally fixed for July 1, and an excellent selection was prepared.

Mr. Norman O'Neill, the composer of the incidental music for the recent production of Maeterlinck's 'Blue Bird,' and his publishers, Messrs. Elkin, are to be congratulated upon the successful issue of their law-suit in connection with that music.

In our September number it should have been stated that the photograph from which our picture of Madame Selmann was reproduced was taken in 1866, by Messrs. Elliott & Fry, and was inserted by their kind permission.

We are obliged to defer until January our report of Sir Walter Parratt's address at the Authors' Club Dinner.

Dr. F. H. Cowen desires it to be known that he was not a candidate for the appointment of Principal of the Guildhall School of Music.

Sir Alexander Mackenzie gave an interesting lecture on 'The Masters of Chamber Music' on November 10, at the London Institution, Finsbury Circus.

A lecture on the Lives and Music of Henry Smart and Edward J. Hopkins was delivered by Dr. C. W. Pearce at a meeting of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, on November 12.

Mr. Clifford B. Edgar, who is well known in many metropolitan musical circles, has been for the third time elected Mayor of Richmond (Surrey). The fact that 1911 is coronation year, has no doubt influenced this happy result.

The programme of the Bedford Musical Society for the 1910-1911 season includes concerts to be given on November 22 ('Hiawatha,' parts 2 and 3); February 21 ('Phaëdra Crohore') and May 16 (Brahms's 'Requiem').

In aid of the Organists' Benevolent League, a performance of 'Elijah' will be given under the direction of Mr. Herbert Hodge, at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, on December 7.

The prospectus of the West Kirby, Hoylake and District Musical Festival promises three evening performances and one matinée, to take place on May 11, 12 and 13, 1911. Several well-known solo singers have been engaged.

An International School of Opera has been established at 41, George Street, Portman Square, under the direction of Mr. Hermann Grünebaum. Chorus work is under the direction of Miss Florence von Etling.

Elgar's 'The Black Knight' and Bridge's 'The flag of England' are chosen for performance by the Middlesbrough Musical Union, under the direction of Mr. N. Kilburn, on December 7.

Messrs. Breitkopf & Hartel have made the interesting experiment of constructing an instrument which combines the properties of the pianoforte and the organ.

Mr. John Phillip Sousa is about to make a 'farewell tour' of the United Kingdom, South Africa, Australia, and New Zealand.

Country News.

BRIEFLY SUMMARIZED.

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed in this summary, as the notices are either prepared from local newspapers or furnished by correspondents. Correspondents are particularly requested to enclose a programme when forwarding reports of concerts.

BATH.—A highly successful concert was given on November 2, by the Avon Vale Musical Society, in aid of local charitable institutions. The performance given of Schumann's 'Paradise and the Peri,' the chief work in the programme, did full justice to the charm and beauty of the work. The solo portions were well sung by Miss Beatrice Spencer, Miss Gertrude Hall, Mr. Louis Godfrey and Mr. Foxton Ferguson. The choir and band, together numbering 150, were ably directed by Mr. J. S. Liddle. Wagner's 'Meistersinger' overture opened the concert.

BEXHILL.—A lecture on 'Milton and his music' was given by Sir Frederick Bridge at St. George's Hall on November 16. He dwelt chiefly upon the music written by Henry Lawes to 'Comus.' Illustrative selections were given by Miss Molly Deane (mezzo-soprano), Mr. A. H. Crouch (baritone), and a string orchestra conducted by Mr. A. P. Howe.

BRIGHTON.—In opening their eighty-fourth season at the Dome, on November 3, with Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul,' the Brighton Sacred Philharmonic Society lived up to their high reputation. The performance, given under Mr. Robert Taylor's experienced and well-inspired conducting, was one that did full justice both to the dramatic and the devotional elements in the work, and one that displayed the choir's fine quality and richness of tone at its best. The chief soloists, all of whom did their parts well, were Miss Marion Perrott, Miss Jessie Larard (new to Brighton), Mr. Joseph Reed, and Mr. Graham Smart. The accompaniments were played by the full orchestra of the Society, aided by Mr. John Dalling at the organ.

DORCHESTER.—The Madrigal Society gave the opening concert of their season on November 2, at the Corn Exchange. The chief work was Elgar's 'The Banner of St. George.' Mr. Edgar A. Lane secured a vivid and musically interpretation, to the merits of which Miss Simpson contributed as soprano soloist. The miscellaneous numbers included Dr. Brewer's 'Waken, lords and ladies gay,' sung by the choir, and solos sung by Miss Simpson and Mr. Cecil G. Graham. The Madrigal Society will combine with the Weymouth Choral Society to perform Haydn's 'Creation,' on December 15, at Weymouth, under Mr. Lane's direction.

HANLEY.—The Hanley Glee and Madrigal Society renewed their acquaintance with Mendelssohn's 'Elijah,' on November 3. It is eight years since they performed the work under the late James Garner, and of the 265 choristers who formed the choir last month, few there were who took part on the last occasion. Miss Esta D'Argo, Miss Florence Taylor, Mr. Frank Mullings and Mr. Watkin Mills supported the principal parts. The orchestra was drawn from Manchester and Liverpool, Mr. I. Freeman, of Llandudno Pier, occupying the leader's chair. The whole performance was most satisfactory, the musical critic of the local Press asserting that Mr. John James had set up a standard that he and his choir would have some difficulty to maintain.

HARROGATE.—At two benefit concerts given by Mr. Julian Clifford on November 5, a number of Wagner excerpts were played by the Leeds Symphony Orchestra. The prison scene from 'Faust' was sung by the Hon. Mrs. Clifford, Mr. Tom Child and Mr. John Browning. An orchestral descriptive piece was conducted by Master Julian Clifford, aged six!

HAYDON BRIDGE.—With assistance from Hexham, Haltwhistle and Penrith, the Primitive Methodist Choir gave a second performance of Stainer's 'The daughter of Jairus' at the Town Hall on November 3. Mr. E. Davidson conducted, and received excellent assistance from the principals, Miss A. Chilton, Mr. C. Surtees and Mr. J. T. Sparke, and from the accompanists, Mr. W. W. Parker (pianoforte) and Mr. N. W. Robson (harmonium). The choir of seventy voices gave impressive interpretations of a number of specially selected choruses.

HULL.—Mauder's sacred cantata 'Olivet to Calvary' was performed on the occasion of an anniversary service held at Fountain Road Primitive Methodist Church on November 6. Mr. Alfred Southwell conducted, and Mr. W. N. Parker assisted at the organ.

LEICESTER.—A sound performance of 'The Creation' was given by the Philharmonic Society at Sir Herbert Marshall's first concert of the season, which took place on November 10. The occasion was one of unusual interest, as being the first appearance of Mr. W. J. Bunney as conductor of the Society. The success he achieved with the choir, and that secured by Madame Donalda as soprano soloist, roused great enthusiasm. The tenor, Mr. James Hay, and the baritone, Mr. Thorpe Bates, also gained, as they deserved, a large share of applause. The amateur band was led by Mr. Betjemann, and Mr. L. V. Wykes assisted at the organ.

LEITCHWORTH.—Haydn's 'The Creation' was efficiently performed by the Philharmonic Society at the Pixmore Institute on November 16, under the direction of Mr. H. Gomersall. The principals were Miss Lucie Lenoir, Mr. Harry Dollins and Mr. Samuel Heath. Mr. Snowden led the orchestra, and Mrs. Talbot and Mr. Seymour accompanied at the pianoforte and organ respectively.

READING.—The Temperance Choral Society gave a creditable performance of Handel's 'Acis and Galatea' at the Small Town Hall on October 25, under the direction of their enthusiastic conductor and trainer, Mr. A. V. Moss. Highly efficient work was done by the soloists, Miss K. Woodley, Mr. A. R. Glead and Mr. W. Drake. In the miscellaneous section of the programme the choir sang 'Hush, gentle wind,' and Miss Cutler gave solos. Miss M. Jackson led the orchestra.

SCUNTHORPE.—The Choral Society, who are face to face with a heavy debt, gave an excellent performance of 'The Messiah' at the Wesleyan Chapel on November 16, under the direction of Mr. F. C. Nicholson. Madame Siviter, Madame Alice Sampson, Mr. A. Monaghan, and Mr. Charlesworth George were the soloists, and Mr. H. Dudley the organist. It is to be regretted that the attendance was insufficient to give the Society much help in their difficulties.

SOUTHPORT.—A 'Ladies' night' programme of a very delightful character was provided on November 17 at the Queen's Hotel by the members of the Southport Vocal Union, under the direction of Mr. J. C. Clarke. The programme, which was much appreciated by a large audience, included Brahms's 'United are we,' Schumann's 'Battle song' and 'Lotos flower,' and Foote's 'Into the silent land.' The Birkdale (mixed) and Apollo (male) Quartets sang part-songs.

SWANSEA.—Gounod's 'Redemption,' which had not been heard in this town for nineteen years, was revived by the Harmonic Society on November 7 at the Albert Hall, under the able direction of Mr. Harry Williams. A fine performance was given of the melodious and sincerely religious work, which impressed the audience to the extent that they refrained from interrupting with applause. Mr. Hulley's orchestra and Mr. David Lewis, at the organ, played the accompaniments. The soloists were Miss Esta d'Argo, Miss Tillie Richards, Mr. John Harrison, and Mr. David Hughes.

TODMORDEN.—The first concert of the season took place on Tuesday, November 8, before a fairly good audience. The first half of the programme consisted of 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast' and 'The death of Minnehaha,' the second part being miscellaneous. The principals were Miss Ada Forrest, Mr. Henry Turnpenney, and Mr. James Coleman, all of whom scored a success. The performance on the whole was good, the only drawback being the scarcity of male voices.

Answers to Correspondents.

MR. GILBERT M. THOMAS asks whether the last melody-note in the third bar of Chopin's twentieth Prelude should not be E natural, alleging that E flat is often played. The combined authority, in their respective editions, of Kindworth, Door, Mikuli, and Reinecke, in favour of E natural, should be conclusive.

VIBRATIONS asks where he could obtain an instrument for recording visibly the vibrations of sound (say, from a tuning fork), for demonstration at a lecture on 'Science and Sound.' The Cambridge Scientific Instrument Company, Cambridge, we believe, make an instrument for recording vibrations, such as is desired.

CAMBRENSIS.—You ask by what method you can teach how to sing at sight and keep tune. The movable doh system applied to the ordinary notation is in our opinion the best method. Novello's Sight Singing Readers (staff notation), Elementary and Intermediate, price sixpence each, will probably suit the case.

J. PUNNELL.—A label is no indication of the value of a violin. But as you have possessed your violin for forty years, it is just possible that it may be a good instrument, if not actually a Strad. Better ask Messrs. W. Hill & Sons, Bond Street.

BEETHOVEN.—'Now thank we all our God' is the usual translation.

Numerous other answers are held over or have been dealt with privately.

THE MUSICAL EDUCATOR.

A LIBRARY OF INSTRUCTION IN MUSIC
WRITTEN BY EXPERTS.

FIRST PAYMENT, 1s. 6d.

The aim of “The Musical Educator” is to supply in compact and interesting form a complete and systematic musical education.

We would especially draw attention to the following names of Leaders in the Musical World, and of the subjects for which they are responsible. The practical value of these sections will be apparent to all students and professors of music and singing.

MARK HAMBOURG, “The Piano and how to Play it.”

EDWIN H. LEMARE, “The Art of Organ Playing.”

MADAME MARCHESI, “The Teaching of Singing.”

JOHN DUNN, “On Playing the Violin.”

DR. F. H. COWEN, “The Art of Conducting.”

Course of Voice Training, Singing, and Solfeggio. Course on the Pianoforte. Course on the Violin. Positions illustrated by Diagrams and Photographs. Course on Harmonium, American Organ, and on the Organ. Lessons on Scientific Basis of Music. Lessons on Rudiments of Music. Course on Harmony and Counterpoint. Lessons in Canon and Fugue. Lessons in Musical Forms, Musical Analysis and Composition. Dictionary of Musical Terms. Articles on the Instruments used in the Orchestras and in Military Bands. History of Music. Biographical Dictionary of Musicians. Articles on Children's Music and Musical Drill. Articles on Choir Training and Conducting. Article on Congregational Music. Article on Musical Degrees and Education. Article on Nationality in Music.

ITS VALUE TO THE TEACHER.

In “The Musical Educator” every section is dealt with by an expert. Its value to the teacher of music is obvious, because it shows the way—at once simple and lucid—in which some of the greatest of musical professors would set about the instruction of a pupil anxious to perfect himself in his particular department, whether it be that of the piano, the violin, the harp, or any other instrument, or of any department of singing.

Add to this its all-round value as a standard work of reference on every point concerning the wide domain of music and musicians, and it will be granted that “The Musical Educator” is unique as well as complete.

TWO OPINIONS.

Sir J. FREDERICK BRIDGE.

“‘The Musical Educator’ is full of useful information plainly set forth. The musical illustrations are excellent.”

Dr. CRESER, Mus.D. Oxon, F.R.C.O., F.T.C.L.

(Examiner in Music at Trinity College), writes:—
“We have here an illuminative work of great value, not only to the student, but also to the general reader. . . . It contains excellent instructions.”

THE VICAR OF BRAY
VARIATIONS

COMPOSED BY

ERNEST AUSTIN.

(Op. 35.)

STRING PARTS, 6s.; PIANOFORTE SOLO, 2s. 6d.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Mr. Austin shows ready employment of orchestral means, and his nine Variations are well wrought and effective. Very expressive is the third, a slow movement in two sections, and its successor, a crisp and lively Scherzo, engages the ear in thoroughly legitimate fashion. . . . A pointed close is provided to a decidedly meritorious and resourceful work, which so took the fancy of the audience that they twice summoned Mr. Austin to the platform and warmly applauded him.

MORNING POST.

The Variations, performed for the first time, created an immediate impression. . . . They indeed make high claims to be regarded as a classic. They are certain to be popular because, with all their skill, ingenuity, and inventiveness, their construction is clear and their original basis is never hidden.

STANDARD.

In all the Variations there is woven a web of harmony both fanciful and artistic. Such is the contrapuntal skill employed in his treatment of the theme that it is only to be regretted that the composer did not make a little more use of it. Mr. Wood secured an excellent reading, and at the close Mr. Austin was called to the platform.

DAILY NEWS.

Quite the most interesting, and individual work was Mr. Ernest Austin's set of Variations for strings on the tune of "The Vicar of Bray."

DAILY MAIL.

It is an immensely clever composition and should be placed permanently in the repertory of the Queen's Hall Orchestra.

REFEREE.

Splendidly played, the merry work was most heartily received.

SUNDAY TIMES.

Nine in number, they show great ingenuity in preserving the characteristics of the subject theme through its rhythmic and harmonic transformations, and the music has a spontaneous and thoroughly English feeling. One of the best sections is that in march time, in the Trio of which fragments of the subject theme are heard against a drone accompaniment; while in the last section the composer has given play to a merry wit and has pictured the four instruments in strenuous competition for priority of audience. So clear was its humour that it was followed with ripples of laughter from the audience, and the call to the composer was unusually enthusiastic.

MUSICAL STANDARD.

A work of such absolute delightfulness is not heard everyday. From start to finish one's interest was held captive as the composer commented variously upon his theme. In the spirit of true beauty were Variations one, three and eight, while energy dominated others, and a vein of delicious humour accounted for the rest. The writing is always clear and sane, and with any amount of sheer cleverness, 'The Finale' is an absolute inspiration of humour, and is worked out with irresistible comedy.

CONCERTO

FOR VIOLIN AND ORCHESTRA

COMPOSED BY EDWARD ELGAR.

(Op. 61).

ARRANGEMENT FOR VIOLIN AND PIANOFORTE - - 7s. 6d. net.
MINIATURE SCORE - - - Cloth, 7s. 6d. net; Paper, 5s. od. ,, Full Score and Orchestral Parts on Hire.

THE TIMES.

It may at once be said that the work is a masterpiece; serene, logical, sincere, and most original, it shows an assured mastery in the handling of resources. . . . The whole of the first movement is interesting in no ordinary degree, and while the writing for the soloist is of astounding difficulty, the part never stands out as the only thing to arrest attention; the fabric of the whole is closely woven, and not only is the orchestral colouring gorgeous, but the design is rich and nobly felt. . . . The slow movement is based on a simple, ballad-like theme, to which the solo violin generally plays an elaborate accompaniment in counterpoint; the whole section has a deliciously fresh effect, and while intensely emotional, is never cloying in its beauty. . . . If the Finale has portions that at a first hearing seem a little abrupt and lacking in point, the use made of the brilliant solo passages is always masterly, and the strenuous character of the movement is quite appropriate after what has preceded it. The great moment of the section, and of the whole Concerto, is a very remarkable Cadenza accompagnata, in which the various themes are passed in review in a kind of rhapsody for the solo instrument. . . . The end of the work is worthy of the dignity of the piece, which, after making due allowance for the excitement of such a first performance as that of last night, must surely rank among the great concertos of the world.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

On a first hearing several things must strike any listener, namely, the splendid simplicity of the music as music; its intense humanness and emotional content; the sheer, haunting beauty of most of the thematic material and its strong individuality. . . . Further, as a complete expression, a complete revelation, of a composer's self it is unquestionably Elgar's masterpiece. . . . We have no hesitation in saying that his new Concerto, while it yields place to none existing in point of beauty, is far ahead of all in the matter of solo technique. . . . Small wonder that the production was a triumph—a triumph for art in general, not merely in the parochial meaning of the term or purely personal. . . . In the matter of sincere humanness in expression and emotional feeling, of sheer beauty of sound, whether in the orchestra or on the solo violin, of fancy and character in the theme, or of mastery of his means, Elgar here has undoubtedly surpassed any previous composition of his own. Of that there can be no question. He has done more; he has, as was said, added a new work to genuine musical literature.

STANDARD.

Melodically it is by turns chaste and sensuous and emotional in feeling. . . . The nobility of sentiment is as marked as ever, and it is in such moments that the composer bursts the shackles that hold him back, and enters into a kingdom that is all his own. . . . In the very first bar the identity of the composer stands revealed. . . . A simple cantabile-like melody ushers in the second movement—the solo part enters with a counter theme—but here again it is the more ennobled strains that hold the senses captive. The Finale contains a wealth of brilliant, swirling, and intricate music for the chief instrument.

MORNING POST.

It is not on its technical side, attractive and distinctive though it be, that the remarkable character of the Concerto is to be found. It is in the poetry of the themes, the wonderful detail of their treatment, and the extraordinary colour of the orchestral scoring. The themes—and there are many employed, since the composer's imagination brooks no restraint—are distinguished by their beauty. . . . Their contour has the calm dignity of the loftiest conception; there is no aiming at a popular appeal, yet the closest attention is secured from the outset by their noble beauty. . . . For its authority, its humanity, and its marvellous constructive detail the Concerto, therefore, stands as the greatest work yet produced by a British composer.

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.

The lofty thoughtfulness of the opening tutti and its concise way of stating the impressive themes at once prepare the hearer for a work of importance. The ravishing beauty of the second melody—which it is noticeable keeps its physiognomy unchanged throughout,—the dramatic first entrance of the soloist, and the extraordinary power and beauty of the close of the movement are things which will strike the most casual hearer. . . . There will be little dispute as to the serene if slightly feminine beauty of the slow movement or as to its lofty idealism. It suggests "Parsifal"—but it is genuine Elgar. Indeed, it will not be surprising if it comes to be considered the most beautiful thing Elgar has written. The vigour of the Finale is irresistible. . . . It contains the most powerful and original section of the whole, a Cadenza accompanied in the most original way. It is remarkable as a résumé of all that has gone before, and is really a miniature movement of great significance.

YORKSHIRE POST.

At a first hearing the Concerto impresses itself on the listener's mind as being artistic in the highest sense of the term. This is suggested at the very opening by the unpretentious but resonant presentation of the first subject. . . . The general sentiment of the music is nobility and quiet happiness, with a touch now and again of yearning tenderness. . . . The Andante, will probably be termed the gem of the composition. It is chiefly based upon a song-like theme of amorous tenderness, and has a companion subject, but both are characterized by a simplicity and refined expressiveness which make a strong appeal to the imagination of the listener. The Finale is the most vigorous portion of the work. At the beginning the solo violin is much more prominent than it has been hitherto, being written for with great brilliancy, but the orchestra soon reasserts itself, and the movement is continued with immense animation until a pianissimo passage of mystic impressiveness intervenes. Soon after this, the soloist begins an elaborate Cadenza, which, however, seems a logical outcome of the preceding matter and the principal climax of the work.

ADDITIONAL HYMNS WITH TUNES

FOR USE WITH

HYMNS ANCIENT AND MODERN OR ANY OTHER CHURCH HYMNAL.

272 pages, Imperial 16mo. Cloth Boards, price Two Shillings and Sixpence.

Tonic Sol-fa Edition, Two Shillings and Sixpence.

Hymns only, Imperial 32mo, Cloth Boards, One Shilling.

Hymns only, medium 32mo, diamond type, cloth, 4d. ; paper, 3d.

Complete edition, bound with HYMNS ANCIENT AND MODERN (Quarto), 7s. 6d. net.

As its name implies, this book is designed for use with, and not in place of, other Church Hymnals.

For this reason the Hymns are numbered from 801, so that the numbers may not interfere with the use of any other hymn book, no other Church hymn book having as many as even seven hundred hymns. Each hymn has its own distinctive tune, and no hymn or tune in this work is found in Hymns Ancient and Modern (Old Edition), so that with the two books no duplication occurs.

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY A. C. MACKENZIE.

(Op. 30.)

STANDARD.

The performance of Sir A. C. Mackenzie's choral masterpiece in its revised form will doubtless assure it a fresh lease of life among choral societies.

MORNING POST.

The changes made by the composer have been directed to the elimination of redundant portions, with a general compression of the work and the provision of an entirely new final portion. The result is a distinct gain to a composition which from its first hearing has always won acceptance for its beauty and its colour. . . . In its new form "The Rose of Sharon" provides a work whose charm and vividness is likely to win for it and its composer a new reputation. . . . It provides an Oratorio of a just degree of difficulty and with an amount of actuality that is likely to cause its complete acceptance.

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.

The new and revised edition should revive its popularity . . . a new and telling chorus ends the first scene of the second part, "The Temptation"; and the final part, "The Reunion," has been effectively re-written.

MR. ERNEST NEWMAN ON COMPETITIVE MUSICAL FESTIVALS.

THE Worcestershire musical competition is to be held at Stourbridge next May, and already the musical forces of the town are concentrating to ensure its success. With a view to stimulating country interest in the festival, a drawing-room meeting, at which Mr. Ernest Newman spoke on the significance and influence of the modern competitive festival movement, was held at Hagley Hall on November 4. Mr. Edward Amphlett presided.

The competitive festival movement, said Mr. Newman, introduced the masses of the people, the people who most needed music, to an enormous amount of first-rate music. It introduced it to them in the best possible way, by making them perform it themselves. That, in itself, was an excellent thing. The main reason for his faith in the movement, however, was that, so far as he could see, it was the only way by which they could get out of the present desperate state of music in England. This was due mainly to the fact that the average English man or woman did not find enjoyment in music, or, at least, did not anticipate finding enjoyment in music. People would not go to concerts unless they thought they would enjoy them. That was why the bulk of our concerts were made up of familiar works. The average concert season consisted of certainly 'The Messiah' and 'Elijah,' a few familiar orchestral works, the 'Tannhäuser' overture, the 'Pathetic' Symphony, and a Beethoven Symphony. Nine-tenths of the English people knew nothing of Wagner. We had had poor performances in the provinces of some of the later works, but all the English provinces knew of Wagner was 'Tannhäuser' and 'Lohengrin.' The 'Ring,' the 'Meistersinger,' and 'Tristan' were unknown, and yet in a year or two we should be celebrating the centenary of Wagner. The only way to get people to make a habit of concert-going and opera-going was to familiarise them with music. And how was that to be done? The only way, he took it, was by constantly playing good music. How were they to break that vicious circle in which they now were? They might have the giving of good concerts made much more easy by private endowments, as had been done to a large extent on the Continent. In England we were as yet very far from that, and we were equally far from State or municipal aid.

MUNICIPALITIES AS CONCERT-GIVERS.

The reason we could not get municipal aid was because the masses of the people were not keen enough about music. If they were keen enough about it they would not mind any sacrifice—and in this connection he reminded them of what Freiburg was doing with its provision of a £200,000 opera house, which it was prepared to run at an annual loss of £6,000, to be defrayed from the rates. There was not the slightest chance of such municipal enterprise as that in England, and, indeed, he recognised that the Town Council were not the body to run art. If we did get a municipal grant, he feared it would be devoted mainly to the wrong purposes—to music in the parks and the police band. Some people looked to the musical festival of the old type to regenerate English musical art. He was afraid, however, that the days of the festivals were numbered. It was not a pleasant prospect, but one they had to face. The festivals were losing their prestige. They had lost ground, he thought, because the big towns had developed a musical life of their own, and the festivals were becoming more and more of the ordinary kind, for which people refused to pay festival prices. The expenses of these festivals were constantly growing, and in the nature of things the receipts could not similarly advance. Hence he was led to say the festival would have to be promoted in the future at a loss of hundreds or thousands of pounds. The only practicable way to develop the musical taste they desired, he suggested, was to tackle the problem from the point of view of making audiences. If they could get a sufficient number of people interested in music to go to a concert room or opera house night after night, there would not be the slightest difficulty, for there were plenty of people quite willing to supply good music. But how to make these audiences? Under the present system of musical education they were not making them. Something must be wrong with the system of teaching. Take a city like Birmingham, with its hundreds of thousands of people. They were overrun with music schools and music teachers; there must be tens of thousands learning music. Yet they rarely came to concerts.

THE VITALITY OF COMPETITIVE FESTIVALS.

Why he placed so much hope in the competitive musical festivals was because they were making audiences. That was their great merit. The vitality of movement was shown by its growth. While the other festivals were going down and the prospect of concert societies was certainly not improving, the competitive festival movement had gone on increasing every year. And it was but about twenty years old. At the first Morecambe festival there were four competitions. Twenty years later the festival ran on for four days, every minute crowded from ten in the morning till ten at night. At Blackpool, a slightly younger festival, there were now fifty-nine distinct competitions. The music there performed was of an equally high class. By no other organization could music of such a class be brought into the homes of the ordinary poorer classes. What were the results of the festival? In the first place the participants were familiarised with music of the highest kind, music they would not have heard under other circumstances. The festivals were in the hands of accomplished musicians, who were careful that no piece went into the syllabus except on its own merits. Boys and girls thus were familiarised with music of really artistic quality from the first. Then the festivals had the very great advantage of setting up a totally new standard of importance to choral music. Nobody who had not been to Morecambe or Blackpool, or one of the big festivals, could have the slightest idea of the beauty, the absolute perfection of the choral singing. Another result would be that ultimately the festival would transform the older style of choral singing.

REVOLUTION OF CHORAL SINGING.

At the present time choral singing was in a rut. It grew up on Handel and Mendelssohn—principally on Handel. They knew what the Handel chorals was. There was no room for the finer shades of emotional expression. Trained in this music, the largest and best festival choirs invariably failed when they came to the music of the modern composers. They had not the technique, and in order to learn the technique they must go to the smaller choirs. Here they heard in every voice the tremble of individual emotion; the beauty of the music was a personal matter to everybody taking part in the piece. That personal emotion translated itself into their tones, into their expression, and some day he hoped they would have a revolution in their choral singing. The festival movement again had brought out a new class of conductors—a lot of people who were previously unheard of, who never suspected their own powers, and would never have had a chance of developing those powers but for the festivals. He had seen miners conduct, and conduct admirably: conduct certainly as well as many of the most famous conductors and trainers of the large festival choirs. The movement had also influenced our composers, as anybody would admit who had followed the development of choral composition in England. Until a man had been to one of those festivals he did not know what the choir could do. In such ignorance composers wrote part-songs of a simple type because they created for the choirs limitations which in fact did not exist. They wrote now exactly as they felt. Mr. Granville Bantock's choral style, for instance, had been absolutely transformed in the space of three years—since he adjudicated at a great Northern festival. But after all, the greatest of all the influences of the festival movement was that it was educating audiences. Their hope was that the constant contact with good music on the part of those who performed it at the festivals would send them to good music elsewhere. They would make a musical habit. That was why people went to hear music on the Continent, not because they were inherently more musical than us; they simply had the musical habit. The movement was instilling a real love of music in the hearts of a great mass of the population; it was going to make audiences for concerts of a more elaborate kind, and when the audiences came, musical taste would be far better than it had ever been in England before. It was making listeners instead of performers, whereas our present system had made performers and not listeners. Therefore, with confidence, he said to everybody who was interested in the progress of music in England, there was no cause that would more repay any time, trouble, or money he might be able to give than the competition festival movement.—From the Birmingham Daily Post.

THE LATE MISS WAKEFIELD.

In the report of the Association of Musical Competition Festivals, just issued, Lady Mary Trefusis contributes the following tribute to the late Miss Wakefield:

To the many friends of Miss Wakefield any appreciation of her character and life must seem superfluous, and any expression of regret wholly inadequate.

Her friendship was a very real and personal possession to a large number of people, and her energy and keenness an inspiration to a far larger circle still.

An intimate friend of Ruskin, and sharing with him an intense love of beauty, Miss Wakefield spent her life in making the motto she selected for the Kendal competition, 'Music is a fair and glorious gift of God,' a living reality to thousands of her countrymen and women.

Although Miss Wakefield did not originate musical competitions in England, she was practically the founder of the movement to establish them; not only was she the indirect promoter of many of them, but a large number owed their preliminary meeting or their tentative beginning to her sympathetic advice and help, and encouraging optimism.

That the movement has grown so remarkably in twenty-five years is owing chiefly to her large-mindedness, which, never hindered nor hampered by a rigid insistence on minute details of local management, welcomed every fresh development in what has been one of the most remarkable musical movements of the past quarter of a century. Musical competition festivals appealed to her on their musical, social, and democratic sides, and she gave them the best of her powers during the best years of her life.

She was the founder of our Association, and looked to it to promote a great union for strength; her loss would be a crushing one to its members and executive if we did not feel that neither dependency nor pessimism can exist with the memory of her brilliant vitality; and that our best memorial is to carry on to the utmost of our ability the work which was so dear to her heart. And must we not believe, that our loss is for Mary Wakefield, in the trust and best sense, a progress 'from harmony to heavenly harmony'?

The complete syllabus of the Morecambe festival, to be held on May 16, 17, 18, 19, is now ready, and can be obtained, price threepence post-free, from the Hon. Sec., Percy W. de Courcy Smale, Festival Office, West End Road, Morecambe.

CHILDREN'S CHOIRS AT THE BLACKPOOL FESTIVAL.

Commenting on the children's day at the recent Blackpool Festival, the Manchester Guardian says: 'But the memory cannot get away from the children—happy folks to be able to learn such music in their childhood. They will carry its influence with them through life. Yesterday I mingled freely with the crowds of solo vocalists, and their comments were both amusing and instructive. Here is an interesting confession from one who took a high place:—"The best day's work I ever did was to come to Blackpool Festival twelve months ago; I learned more in those few hours listening to others, than in all the teaching I had ever received; how not to do things; what to avoid and what to accept; my faults were clearly but kindly set forth; I knew I had them, and was helped to get rid of them." There is the whole secret of the hold these festivals have got on our northern public. A great democratic school of music has been established, having for its object the ultimate recovery of music amongst the masses.'

The Times also says: 'There is no more delightful part of these festivals than the classes for children's choirs, and no feature of their work has been more beneficial than the part they have played in helping to kill that raucous tone which used to make the singing classes in elementary schools into a hideous travesty of music. Where the old barbaric methods exist—and unfortunately they still exist in some places—the children grow up without the smallest conception of what a beautiful sound means, and with the idea that music is merely a matter of beating out a jiggling tune in the same way that they hear it ground out by the piano-organ in the street. Every one of the children's choirs who sang on Friday produced a pure quality of tone which many a Cathedral choir might envy, and all showed that in matters of phrasing and interpretation their intelligence was fully awake and alert. The challenge banner which is awarded for singing, in three classes, an unaccompanied part-song (three voices), a cantata, and a sight-test, was deservedly won by the Devonshire Road School, Blackpool. The work done by another choir which did not enter for the challenge banner, but which won the competition on Tuesday for female voices open to girls under 18 years of age, is also particularly worthy of mention, both because of the exceptionally good quality of their singing and because it happens that they do not come from the North, but from Leyton, in Essex. Southerners, and Londoners especially, accept the vocal superiority of the North much too complacently; and we are falling into the lazy habit of sending to Yorkshire or Lancashire when we want to hear good choral singing. When one hears voices of such a smooth and unforced quality, such a subtle expressive power, and such rhythmic feeling and vitality, all coming from a number of little girls whose average age is between 12 and 13 and who are taught in an elementary school on the borders of London, one is inclined to wonder whether there is any valid reason for the fact that choral performances in London concert rooms never rise above the level of insipid mediocrity unless the choir is specially imported from the North. These children gave a private performance on Saturday morning, at which they sang several part-songs by Elgar, Schubert's "An die Musik," and other things in a way which showed not only the excellence of their training, but that they are all genuine little enthusiasts. Perhaps it is only the lack of that quality which generally keeps back London singing.'

 - 2nd. Stocksbridge P. M. (Mr. S. W. Slater).
- Mr. Harry Evans was the adjudicator in all classes.

KEIGHLEY.

THE SUMMERSCALES COMPETITION.

October 29 and November 5.

This festival continues to be successful. It attracted a large number of solo players and singers, and choirs as follows: (a) children's, 8; (b) male-voice, 14; (c) mixed-voice, 17; (d) female-voice, 5. The tests in these were respectively:

- (a) 'The echoing green' (Stanford); 'Drake's drum' (Coleridge-Taylor).
- (b) 'Wide o'er the brim' (Clarke Whitfield); 'Bind thy brows' (Stainer); 'How sweet thy modest light' (Burrows); 'Heroes of the storm' (Frank Davidson).
- (c) 'Æolian harp' (F. James); 'O nightingale' (Frank Davidson); 'Who is Sylvia?' (E. German); 'The hunting song' (Benedict).
- (d) 'The corall'd caves' (Smart); 'From the green heart of the waters' (Coleridge-Taylor).

The chief results were as follows; the figures show the marks obtained:

Children's Choirs.—1, Heaton Church Choir, 145 marks; 2, Sipton Brougham Street School Senior, 143; 3, Ingrow Council School, 132.

Male Choirs which had not won a first prize.—1, Wyke Glee Union, 145; 2, Heaton Church Choir, 144.

Mixed-voice Choirs (open).—1, Thornton Vocal Union, 151; 2, Saltair Prize Choir, 137; 3, Keighley Vocal Union, 127; 4, Bradford Vocal Union, 126.

Ladies' Choirs (open), not more than 24 voices.—1, Settle Choral Union, 137; 2, Keighley Vocal Union, 134.

Mixed Choirs which had not won a first prize.—1, Soyland Choir, Ripponden, 143; 2, Thornton United Methodist Chapel, 137; 3, West End Congregational Chapel, Sowerby Bridge, 133.

Male-voice Choirs (open).—1, Leeds Musical Union, 140; 2, Tordmorden Male Choir, 139.

The adjudicators were Mr. Frederick Corder (vocal) and Mr. William Townsend (pianoforte). In giving his adjudication on the second day, Mr. Corder said that such a competition made him feel a pride in his own country. It was not often that one could feel that sense of pride, especially in London. London was always looked upon as the centre of the universe, but he regretted to say that in matters that they might really call musical, it was not so. Choral music did not seem to prosper in London. Perhaps it was due to the fact that there were too many other attractions, because there had been a time when it flourished more than now. He supposed a great many people found golf and bridge more interesting, but he thought it was a pity that choral music should be cast aside. But in the North choral music did flourish, and it was a joy to come and adjudicate, although he did it with fear and trembling. The competitions this time had been of a very high level of merit throughout. The choral singing, of course, claimed first place. They had had fine tenors, and good altos and sonorous basses, such as they did not hear everywhere. The solo competitions also showed students of great promise, while the children's choirs were really most effective. The interest and polish they put into the work were wonderful.

Mr. Allan Bradley, the hon. sec., and the committee, have certainly every reason for satisfaction. The interest in the festival is not only unabated, but increased.

At a competition organized by the Co-operative Association at Ilkerton, on October 29, there were junior choirs and adult and junior solo classes. Long Eaton Choir, under Mr. William Woolley, won the first place for the fifth time. Miss Madge Bradber (Derby) won the contralto prize, and Gladys Cotter (Derby) that for girls' solo-singing (under 16). Mr. T. H. Warner adjudicated.

BARROW-IN-FURNESS.

November 10, 11, 12.

The twelfth annual festival brought a substantial advance in the standard of performance, if not in the number of entries. The adjudicators, Mr. Dan Price and Mr. E. T. Davies, were highly complimentary in most of their criticisms.

The chief solo prize-winners were the following:

- Pianoforte.—Miss Vida Whittaker.
Violin.—Miss Doris Haughton.
Boys' solo-singing.—Jack Kewley, Dalton.
Girls' solo-singing.—Miss Gwennie Bell.
Soprano.—Miss Mary Curwen.
Contralto.—Miss Dorothy Bottomley.
Tenor.—Mr. Albert A. Wood.
Baritone.—Mr. J. T. Lackinsson.
Bass.—Mr. Edward B. Nowell.

The following were the tests and chief results:

Test: 'Clouds o'er the summer sky' (G. von Holst); 'Song of the dunes' (C. H. Lloyd).

- 1st. Millom Wesleyan S. S., senior (Mr. F. J. Phillips).

The event created great interest, and once again demonstrated the excellent musical capacity of competitors. As will be seen, Mrs. Bourne, fresh from her laurels at Blackpool, again won the chief choral prize.

PRESTON.

November 17, 18, 19.

This festival used to be held early in the spring. This year the experiment was tried of holding it on the above dates. There was obviously some risk in choosing a period so soon after the great Blackpool event, which was held, as recorded in our last issue, from October 18 to 22, because although Preston has to some extent its own clientele, it also caters for the attendance of the best-known Northern choirs. As it turned out, the chief choral sections were not well supported, but, as a compensation, there were numerous entries in other classes.

The tests were on the whole most admirably chosen as exemplifications of good and suitable music. In one choral section the pieces were chosen to meet the protests, made last year by Dr. R. C. Brown, a well-known amateur and deeply respected medical practitioner, that the tests then employed were too difficult and not interesting to the general public. The tests selected to meet his views were the part-songs 'When Spring comes round' (Smart) and 'Lullaby of life' (Leslie).

The school singing was excellent. There were not a large number of entries in these sections, but the interest taken in the proceedings was great. The local education authority gave its support to the scheme, and allowed children to attend on the afternoon of the children's day, with the consequence that the large hall was packed by some thousands of juveniles who were eager appreciators of the action-songs.

Two notable features of the results were the remarkable performance of 'Hear my prayer' (Mendelssohn) by Wilfrid V. Perry in the boys' solo class, and the still more remarkable performance of Miss Brown in the adult soprano solo section. This young lady is only nineteen, and exhibited a beautiful voice and a highly temperamental style. The tests she sang were Handel's 'So shall the lute' and Goring Thomas's setting of Mignon's song. It may be hoped that her undoubted talent will not be unduly exploited.

Mr. Tattersall's fine Southport Choir was the only one that ventured to tackle the three tests in the mixed-voice choir, A section. They sang very finely.

The adjudicators were Dr. McNaught, Mr. Dan Price, Mr. S. H. Broughton, Mus. Bac., and Mr. J. E. Adkins, Mus. Bac.

PUBLIC ELEMENTARY SCHOOLS (Local).

Tests: 'Fair is the night' (Pinsuti); 'Winds are blowing' (Haynes).

No. 2.	(a)	(b)	(c)
No. 3.	(a)	(b)	(c)
No. 4.	(a)	(b)
No. 5.	(a)	(b)

Six children were sent in from each of four schools.

St. Mary's School children got every note down correctly, except that one child omitted an octave mark!

A meeting of the conductors and others concerned in the People's Palace Musical Festival (London, E.), was held at the Chapter House, St. Paul's Cathedral, on Saturday, November 12. The object was partly social, and in order to set the machinery going for next year's festival. Dr. McNaught spoke on the choice of music and choir training (the audience being turned into a choir for the purpose), and on behalf of the committee and promoters of the festival he presented Mr. J. McGowan, the hon. treasurer, with the volumes of the new edition of Grove's 'Dictionary,' as a mark of the subscribers' regard and esteem.

The musical score is for a piece titled "O Night, When Christ Was Born!". It features five vocal parts (Soprano, Alto, Tenor 1, Tenor 2, and Bass) and a piano accompaniment. The music is in 3/4 time and G major. The vocal parts enter with the lyrics "night, when Christ was born!" and "O night di-". The piano accompaniment provides a harmonic foundation with arpeggiated chords and a steady bass line. The score includes dynamic markings such as "cres." (crescendo) and "p" (piano). The piece concludes with a final chord and a fermata.

Musical score for the song "O Night, O Night, Di-Vine!". The score is written for voice and piano. The vocal parts (Soprano, Alto, Tenor, and Bass) are arranged in four staves, each with its own lyrics. The piano accompaniment is shown in the bottom two staves. The tempo markings are dim. (diminuendo), rit. (ritardando), and a tempo. (return to tempo). The piano part includes markings for dim., rit., cres. (crescendo), and mf Gt. both hands. (mezzo-forte, Grand staff, both hands).

Lyrics for the vocal parts:

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT AND STRATHEARN, K.G.

PRINCIPAL—SIR ALEXANDER CAMPBELL MACKENZIE, Mus.D., LL.D., D.C.L., F.R.A.M.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC offers to students of both sexes (whether amateur or professional) a thorough training in all branches of music under the most able and distinguished Professors. In addition to receiving individual lessons in the various branches of the Curriculum, students have the advantage of attending the Orchestral, Choral, and Chamber Music Classes, and the weekly Lectures on music and musicians. Evidence of their progress is given at the Fortnightly and Public Concerts and by periodical Operatic and Dramatic Performances.

There are three Terms in the Academic year—viz., the Michaelmas Term, from Michaelmas to Christmas; the Lent Term, from early in January to Easter; and the Midsummer Term, from early in May until the end of July.

The Fee for the ordinary curriculum is 11 Guineas per Term.

A large number of Scholarships and Prizes are founded and are competed for periodically.

Students who show special merit and ability receive the distinction of being elected by the Directors Associates of the Institution, and are thereby entitled to the use after their names of the initials A.R.A.M. Students who distinguish themselves in the musical profession after quitting the Institution may be elected by the Directors Fellows of the Royal Academy of Music, and are thereupon entitled to the use after their names of the initials F.R.A.M.

Subscribers have the privilege of attending the Lectures and Public Concerts and of introducing friends in proportion to the amount of their subscriptions.

An examination of persons trained independently of the Academy is held twice a year—viz., during the Summer and Christmas vacations—successful candidates at which are elected Licentiates of the Academy, and are thereupon entitled to the use after their names of the initials L.R.A.M. The syllabus is issued annually at Easter. Last day for entry for the September Examination, June 30; for the Christmas Examination, October 31.

An examination of persons engaged in the Training of Children's Voices is held in September and during the Christmas Vacation, and a certificate is granted to successful candidates.

Prospectus, entry form, and all further information may be obtained on application.
